Red Bank: too many cars, not enough parking

By TED LOUD The Register

RED BANK — Local officials, as well as the businessmen who have set up shop here, like to look for the silver linings inside the dark clouds: two of the borough's longest-standing and most stubborn problems, they are quick to point out, are actually symptoms of good things happening in the borough.

But, while the optimism is sincere, the problems run deep and the concerns are on everybody's mind. Whether you talk with elected and appointed government officials, or with the proprietor of the corner candy shop, the closely related subjects of traffic and parking are bound to come up. RED BANK - Local officials, as well as to come up.

Parking — there just isn't enough of it. Traffic — there's just too much of it.

Although those two statements may seem overly glib or simplistic, few in the borough would deny that they are essen-

Representatives from the public and private sectors have been addressing the problems for years — and not without some notable successes. Parking lots and some notable successes. Farking lots and an enclosed garage have been built, through combined public and private funding. Roadways have been improved, traffic on certain clogged thoroughfares has been rerouted, and some of the worst intersections have been redesigned.

But as the borough continues to experience economic growth at a pace that is the envy of many other communities, the headaches for the people who live, work and shop in Red Bank continue to multiply.

Within its 1.75 square miles, the borough has more than 450 stores, about 200 practicing professionals, nearly 50 licensed eateries, at least a dozen major brokerage firms, a major area medical center and a train station serving the of commuters from several communities.

On a given day, the borough's 12,000 residential population swells to 50,000 or better, according to official estimates. And few of those who come to the borough use public transportation.

Much of the vehicular traffic is not even generated by Red Bank. Route 35, one of the area's major north-south thoroughfares, passes through the heart of the borough — and few merchants would complain about the potential customers that roadway brings through the

From the earliest days of the automobile — when the number of cars was a fraction of what it is today and when virtually all parking was along the curbside — local planners understood the close relationship between the problems of traffic and parking.

Borough Administrator Lawrence M. Borough Administrator Lawrence M. Riccio estimates that 10 percent of the traffic in Red Bank is generated by cars circulating for parking spaces. Curbside parking on the borough's busiest streets essentially eliminates the possibility of four-lane traffic through town to speed the flow, while the obtrusive efforts of unskilled parallel parkers is a familiar and annoying hindrance to the smooth flow of traffic.

According to the most recent estimates, the borough's parking shortfall has increased eight- or nine-fold since a 1954 study prepared by the borough's engineering consultants, T&M Associates of Middletown, found that the borough has a parking deficiency of 122 parking spaces.

Businessman Bernard (Bud) Natelson said more recent studies put the parking shortfall at closer to 900 spaces, adding that the situation promises to get worse before it gets better. Natelson, who owns a men's clothing store on Broad Street, recently was chairman of a committee for the Red Bank Area Chamber of Commerce studying solutions to the parking crunch.

Local fishermen rely on the area for docking and unloading, and the storing and selling of fish. Carnival! Charity ball-goers experience bit of Rio

By JAN MARIE WERBLIN The Register

OCEANPORT — Amid the mingling fragrances of gardenias and other exotic blossoms, thousands of ball-goers enjoyed an evening of "Carnival in Rio" last night at the Monmouth Park Charity Ball.

Although not everyone sported black-tie attire, those who did were bedecked in outfits ranging from gold lame balloon dresses reminiscent of the 1950s, to beaded and sequined gowns inspired by those of the 1930s and '40s.

Under the sparkle of silver and gold fringe hung from the ceiling, others converged on the midway

MONMOUTH BEACH - State efforts to force the borough to allow easier access to its beaches have been met with dismay by some local officials. And while the borough has more or less complied with a state demand to create a beach access plan, putting it into effect is another matter.

Without a government-ap-proved beach access plan, neither monmouth Beach nor its neighbors can participate in a federally authorized, $70 million beach restoration program.

However, negotiations between state and borough officials over putting the plan into effect may have reached a standoff. Sodano added that Monmouth Beach also wants the state or federal government to fund the cost of acquiring parking and beachfront areas. Meanwhile, acquisition dates in the borough's quisition dates in the borough's access plan have come and gore—since no money has been offered from either government.

The target dates—for seven parking areas and five waterfront tracts—ranged from spring 1985 to spring 1986. But, according to Sodano, "there has been no property acquisition. We're waiting to find out where the money's going to come from."

More abuse reports credited to publicity

By MARY GAY JOHNSON The Register

Mounting publicity and increased awareness about child abuse and neglect have accounted for a rise in the number of reported — and substantiated — abuse cases on both state and local levels.

A recent study by the state Division of Youth and Family Services showed that in 1985 of the 47,126 reports of suspected child abuse, a total of 18,038, or about 38 percent, were substantiated. In 1984, the total statewide figure was 44,368 abuse incidents and a substantia-tion rate of 14,970 — or about 20 percent.

Here in Monmouth County, of the 3,086 incidents reported in 1985, 969 — or a little more than 31 percent — were substantiated. Figures for 1984 show 2,937 incidents reported and 758, or 27 percent, substantiated. The incidents include physical and sexual abuse, as well as neglect.

The report notes that in almost 83 ercent of all substantiated cases of child abuse, the child's parent, guardian or caretaker was responsible for the abuse. Last year, Monmouth County had the fifth-highest number of reported inci-dents of child abuse, behind Essex, Camden, Hudson and Passaic counties.

Greenwood said the soil became available "on the spur of the moment" from the parking lot expansion project at the railroad station and he decided to keep the soil in the borough with future plans for it in mind.

But in acting so quickly, Green-wood neglected to apply for a dumping permit.

According to the state Soil Erosion and Sediment Control Act, if more than 5,000 square feet of soil is to be dumped or removed, a permit must be obtained from the state Soil Conservation District.

The borough had a permit to remove soil from the train station project in which 118 parking spaces are being added, but Greenwood said he had not known that a dumping permit was also required.

Complaints to various state

State cleared Kaye of conflict

REEHOLD — The state attorney general's office this week cleared Monmouth County Prosecutor John A. Kaye of any conflict in his investigation of the shooting of black robbery suspect James Irby by Freehold Police.

NAACP leaders had criticized Kaye for calling Irby's assailant, Patrolman Michael Whaley, a good officer.

The attorney general's office disagreed with black leaders, however, and ruled that Kaye's acquaintance with Whaley presents no conflict.

More than 300 people turned out for hearings at Monmouth College to express overwhelming opposition to the U.S. Navy's expansion plans for Naval Weapons Station Earle in Middletown.

cluding U.S. Rep. James Howard, spoke out against the project at hearings in West Long Branch.
A loose coalition of Mid-

Fair show spotlights local youths

Crowd enjoys song, dance performances

By STEPHANIE FERICH

FREEHOLD — Area youngsters got to strut their stuff for an audience of more than 200 people last night in the Monmouth County Fair Talent Showcase.

Ranging in age from 9 to 18 years, the performers braved the spotlight to entertain the crowd with dance, song and instrumental acts. The 13 acts were not judged this year.

"It's the kids' enthusiasm that makes it so interesting," said Cynthia Molio, 44, of East Brunswick, as she watched the show.

cynthia Molio, 44, of East Brunswick, as she watched the show. They're enjoying themselves up there, even though they're terified."

Michele Walker, 17, of Middletown, a four-year veteran of the Register-sponsored event, was one of the evening's highlights, as she drew an energetic round of applause for her jazzdance rendition of the "Conga."

Dressed in a black leotard with red ruffled sleeves, Walker's exhiberance came through as she smiled and pranced to the fast-paced music, drawing instant applause for beautifully executed side aerials and barrel leaps.

"She's unbelievable," said Dina Trunzo, of Middletown, after watching Walker perform. "She warms the whole crowd and gets them involved."

them involved."

Pauline Estenes, 60, of Manalapan, watched with admira-Mon as one act after another was performed during the 90-minute show.

"They're just wonderful," she said. "You see some of these kids up there and you think someday they're going to make it big."

The Showcase, in its fourth year at the fair, is an opportunity for young people to refine their performing talents, increase their elf-confidence and just plain have fun.

And maybe, just maybe, launch a career for themselves.

Hoping for that once-in-a-life-time dream are Matt Balzarini, 13, Brian Ciuffreda, 14, Marc Costello, 13, and Bryan Kregg, 14, who together performed the song Squeeze Box.

Calling themselves "The Rubber Band," these Holmdel boys had the crowd clapping a steady beat as they put on an authentic rock concert rendition of the popular "Who song."

Tom Kregg, father of the band's spiano player, stood by proudly and said he supports his son's dream all the way.

"If that's what they want to do and they can be happy and suc-cessful, why not?" he said.

ON HER TOES — Gina Magistro, 12, of Union Beach, performs a ballet solo from "Don Quixote" last night before a crowd of more than 200 people at The Register's Talent Showcase at the Monmouth County Fair.

Marlboro transfers housing

MARLBORO — The Township Council voted 3-1 Thursday night to transfer 126 units of Marlboro's low- to moderate-income housing obligation out of the township.

Under a ruling by the Council on Affordable Housing, a municipality can transfer up to 50 percent of its Mt. Laurel housing quota to any other town willing to accept it.

The name of the town has not yet been announced pending final acceptance by its town council, according to Councilman John

As an added incentive for towns to accept additional Mt. Laurel housing, Humbert said builders must agree to provide funds for the rehabilitation of existing housing.

Humbert, who cast the one dissenting vote, said he voted against the resolution because it was a "bastardization of Mt. Laurel."

"It's all a numbers game," he said. "It defeats what the state was trying to do originally."

"The availability of parking is the life blood of the business sector," Riccio said, adding that this belief led to the formation of the borough's new Parking Utility to bring parking under the authority of a single, integrated system.

Members of the business com-munity, who have so far ex-pressed guarded optimism about the new authority, say their lob-bying for a better parking situwhile many businessmen private-ly express impatience about the page of parking improvements, both sides see the potential for an utprecedented degree of cooperation on a controversial and traditionally divisive issue.

The utility is run by Herbert

Brickson (see separate article), who assumed his duties in May. Erickson agrees that there is a demand for more off-street parkg, and he has begun planning for and new lot (off Gold and Drum-mond streets) that will entail private property acquisitions as well as financial commitments from business owners on a cost-per-space basis. But he proclaims himself against building any more multi-level parking garages. multi-level parking garages.

The borough's one enclosed parking facility — the 565-space Chobe Court Garage, completed in 1983 — has not been plagued by the degree of under-utilization common in other cities and towns, Brickson said. The garage, built with funds from the borough and the help of a federal grant, is usually at least three-quarters full during the day, with most of the customers being hospital em-However, Erickson and other

In addition to the borough's reluctance to foot most of the billfor a garage, Erickson has noted that many motorists fear that garages are unsafe a concern that is often justified in many big cities, he notes.

Erickson's immediate objecparking habits of shoppers and employees. One of his top priorities is putting an end to "meter-feeding," the tendency of many business employees to use two-hour-limit parking lots for their entire eight-hour work shift by putting additional coins in the parking meter every two hours.

Besides defeating the purpose of parking time limits, this practice also forces short-term shoppers to pay long-term rates for brief stops because of a lack of spaces elsewhere.

Several borough lots — includ-ing the White Street lot behind Monmouth Street — have longterm parking areas that em-ployees and other long-term users were unaware of, Erickson said. He has tried to steer them in said. He has tried to steer them in the right direction by putting warning notices on their wind-shields or talking to them personally, and a booklet on the borough's parking regulations is also in the works for general distribution distribution.

But the current period of leniency will not last forever, and a major part of Erickson's job will be to push for stricter enforcement, mostly of ordinances which have gone effectively unenforced. A proposed computerized filing system will also make it easier for

Erickson to keep track of habitual

Ruth McCulloch, a member of the Chamber of Commerce's Retail Trade Board, recently informed a meeting of merchants that the meter-feeding will have to come to an end. The impending crackdown has caused some concern emond shopowners, although cern among shopowners, although some have admitted they and their employees were unaware of the 10-hour parking options that existed within walking distance of their stores.

'My goal is to stop the meterfeeding and make it more convenient for the short-term parkers who use our stores and businesses," Erickson said. "They love the town, and we want them to keep coming."

Red Bank parking chief gets lots of experience

Herbert Erickson is a specialist in a field few people think of as a specialty: parking.

"There's no book on parking," says Erickson, who has been working in a crowded basement office in the Red Bank Municipal Building for the past two months.

Even so, in a business— and retail—oriented community such as Red Bank, parking can be controversial. In fact, the concerns expressed by businessmen about insufficient parking led the Borough Council to form a Parking Utility and hire Erickson to run it. run it.
So far, relations between utility

So far, relations between utility director Erickson and businessmen have been smooth, although some storeowners shudder at the thought of proposed toughening of enforcement policies against meter-feeding, or using short-term lots for long-term likes.

Before coming to Red Bank, Erickson worked for the Ocean County communities of Toms County communities of Toms River and Dover Township. In that area, he spearheaded the creation of a municipally owned 300-space park-ride commuter lot, one of the largest in the state, with room for expansion.

Erickson, a Sea Bright resident, has served as a parking consultant or adviser to communities throughout the state.

He was also the driving force

He was also the driving force behind bus shuttle service between Toms River and Island Beach State Park. The Ocean County beach was similar to Sandy Hook, Erickson said, in that insufficient parking forced the park to close as early as 9 a.m., even though there is still bleatiful forced to the park to close as early as 9 a.m., even though there is still bleatiful force with recent force with recent parks. plenty of room for swimmers.

The beach shuttle was the re-

On Thursday, Rubenstein said his office has suspected foul play.

"From what we knew about this man, he was't the typewho would take off without a word," he said.

Keys opened the Village Cafe Restaurant in New Hope in March and had invested in other property in the area, Rubenstein, said. He was a collector of antiques and art works and had previously works and had previously operated an antique shop.

Mahon said that the area where Keys' body was found is near a trail and is difficult to reach by car. He said the grave was so well hidden that horseback riders had recently gone right by it without noticing anything.

Crabiel has collected $49,451 in contributions, according to The greatest mismatch, according to the FEC forms, is Roe's $230,456 treasury to Republican challenger Thomas Zampino's $90.48.

The closest fund-raising fights are between Courter and Crablel, and between Rep. Christopher Smith, a Hamilton Township Republican, and state Democratic Party veteran Jeffery Laurenti of Trenton.

Courter and Crabiel are less than $9,000 apart in contributions received since Jan. 1, the records show. But Courter's nearly $300,000 total campaign treasury — which includes money collected during his four terms in Congress — is more than six times Crablel's $49,451 cash on hand.

Smith and Laurenti are less than $1,000 apart in funds raised, with the challenger taking a slight edge. Laurenti has raised $67,850 since the first of the year, compared with Smith's $66,900, the FEC reports show.

GOP Rep. Dean A. Gallo of Parsippany, who took in $217,435 during the six-month reporting period, is far ahead of his Democratic opponent, Rutgers law professor Frank Askin, who has raised $56,863. Phil Angarone, chairman of the Mercer County Republican Com-mittee, said from Smith's county headquarters in Trenton that the congressman was out campaigning and could not immediately be reached for comment.

Smeal said other pressing elec-tion issues included referendums on the ballots in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Oregon and Arkansas, asking voters to outlaw Medicaid funding for abortions.

"I think it's imperative that we defeat them to send a strong message to Congress and the country that women will not tolerate outlawing of abortion," she said.

As for Rehnquist's nomination, she said, "It will set us back, no question about it. He has the most extreme position on the court against women's rights. He has been repeatedly against us on affirmative action and a whole host of women's issues."

Smeal also told the women to urge their representatives to support a bill the House is to vote on next month that would give workers four months' unpaid leave to care for newborn children, and to care for critically ill elderly relatives or children. About 123 nations in the world have such laws, most of which provide for paid family leave, she said.

"There are only seven nations that don't have it and we lag behind the rest of the Western world on this," Smeal said.

The ranks of those entering U.S. convents and seminaries are rising slightly, but steadily.

In 1979, there were 45,726 students enrolled in theological schools in the United States, and by 1982 enrollment had brushed the 50,000 mark.

For the first time in many years, enrollment dipped harely

For the first time in many years, enrollment dipped — barely — last year, falling from 53,114 in 1984 to 52,794, according to a report recently released by the Association of Theological Schools in the United States and Canada. The pay is minimal, the hours are long and the image doesn't permit them to have their own problems. Yet they shun the allurproblems. Yet they shun the allur-ing lifestyle of today's young people, abandon secular careers and move toward an uncertain retirement.

"I have to admit, when I started at St. Charles (Borromeo Sem-inary), I had no idea how tough it was going to be. I thought it would was going to be. I thought it would be painless — I'd pray a lot and play lots of basketball," said James Olson, 23, of Warminster, who would like to be a parish priest after he is ordained.

But Olson, like other seminary students interviewed, said the academic workload alone leaves little time for actual ministerial.

"This community is not as warm and as open as I had hoped for, but I think that's because of the workload," said Acton, who is in her second year at Princeton, studying to become a Presbyterian minister.

"People here set priorities and the top priority is getting through the work," she said. "Sometimes that imposes on basic Christian charity, and that's too bad."

And for those who had been away from school for years, the thought of classes and homework was intimidating.

"I shook in my shoes," said Susan Whaley, of Ewing, who had

"I left nursing because I didn't feel I could meet the spiritual needs of the patients," she said.
The financial costs for those intending to either take vows of poverty or, at the least, lead an austere life, are high — although they are considerably lower than the cost of preparing for most professions.

Tuition at St. Charles and Princeton, for example, runs $3,000 a year, while room and board is another $3,000 and $2,555, respectively.
St. Charles' tuition dips to $1,500 for each of the last four years of study. That means that a seminarian enrolling at St. Charles with no prior undergraduate study will pay some $30,000 for his eight years in the seminary.

And despite the relatively high job security, the pay is far from

"If you're very concerned with buying a BMW then you probably won't be in the church. Personally, I'm just as happy with a Ford Escort," said Chris Dixon, 26, who is studying at Princeton to become a Methodist minister.

Nuns and religious order priests meet expenses through a closely guarded community purse. In contrast, Catholic diocesan priests and ordained Protestant ministers draw taxable salaries.
In the Diocese of Trenton, for example, associate pastors with fewer than six years in the priesthood receive a monthly salary of $425, while pastors collect $525 a month, said Monsignor Casimir Ladzinski, director of priest personnel for the rector of priest personnel for the 124-parish diocese.

Like their Catholic counter-parts, Protestant ministers receive salaries, in addition to a benefits package that usually includes a furnished parsonage, health and life insurance, and a modest pension plan.

In the southern New Jersey conference of the United Methodist Church, which includes Mercer, Burlington and much of Middlesex counties, the minimum salary for first-year ministers is $14,860.

Despite an overall rise in sem-inary school enrollment in recent years, Catholic schools are not doing as well.

This year there are 10,811 men and women enrolled in seminaries

Route 520 expansion opposed

DAVID GUEST

HOLMDEL — The Township Committee expressed its disap-proval at Thursday night's meeting of a county proposal to in-crease the right-of-way for Route 520.

The county Planning Board had held a public hearing last week to discuss a proposal expanding the right-of-way of the county road to 100 feet from the Middlesex County line to State Highway 35.
Route 520, also called Main Street and Newman Springs Road

within the township, could not be expanded without passing too near homes along the road, Deputy Mayor Elaine M. Frey said.

Township Engineer Edward Broberg said the current width of Route 520 within the town ranges from expand 50 to 80 feet.

The committee unanimously authorized sending a letter to the board condemning the proposal, and will have representatives present at the next board hearing, at which a formal decision could be made.

Committeeman Ernest Cote, one of the opponents of the motion, said that action on the ordinance should be postponed, largely because of the need to consider Mount Laurel requirements imposed by the state.

He said U.S. Rep. James J. Howard, D-N.J., has indicated that the federal government may offer acquisition funds.

"All this stuff is talked about, but nothing's actually done, so you don't know what's going to happen," Sodano said.

participate in the project, each town must create a beach access plan that is approved by the state Department of Environmental Protection and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

Only $2.8 million has been appropriated — for preliminary planning and engineering work. With federal budget slashing, there is no guarantee that the rest will come through, although Congress is now considering another $2.3 million appropriation for engineering work.

The federal government is to fund beach replenishment — the biggest part of the project. The state is to fund sea wall restoration with smaller contributions from county and local governments.

But in light of extreme federal budget constraints that have marked the Reagan adminis-tration, Long Branch and Mon-mouth Beach officials have specumouth Beach officials have speculated that the ambitious plan may turn out to be a pipe dream.

On the other hand, Howard aide Nancy Fatemi said yesterday that she is "absolutely" confident the funds will be appropriated, since the project is a priority for both Howard and the Corps. Howard has been instrumental in getting the entire project authorized by the entire project authorized by Congress, and the first $2.8

million appropriated. Authorization means that Congress approves of the project, but actual appropriations require separate votes each year.

All three towns have suffered substantial beach erosion in recent years, especially Monmouth Beach. A 1962 aerial map of the borough shows an unbroken, size-able beach. A 1981 map shows almost no beach, and there have been no significant beachfill programs since then.

The borough's only public beach — the Monmouth Beach Bathing Pavilion, has a narrow strip of beach that disappears at high tide. high tide.
The fact that the state is insisting on wider beach access — when there is no beach — is when there is no beach — is something of a puzzle to Sodano. Even if the program comes through — and provides a 50-foot-wide beach earmarked for the entire length of the town — Sodano said it will make little difference. "So you get a little storm and you have no beach," he

"It's good for fishermen, and for a buffer, but otherwise I don't think it will have much impact." According to the DEP, the state

aims to have the plan in effect by the time beaches are created.
Officials have mentioned two proposed starting dates for the beachfill project — 1988 and

The three towns are negotiating with DEP to work out acceptable plans. Monmouth Beach submitted a draft in 1984. According to DEP Public Access Planner Karen Kominsky, the borough's plan covers the basics. But Monmouth Beach has yet to devolve mouth Beach has yet to develop realistic implementation details, such as funding and target dates,

She said DEP is waiting to hear from Monmouth Beach. But

Mayor Sodano said the borough has no intention of coming up with implementation details until funds become available — both for the project itself and the property acquisition.

The proposed parking areas are a half-acre tract at the intersection of Seaview Avenue and Park Road; a 2.6-acre tract on the west side of Seaview Avenue; three more tracts on Seaview Avenue, one of which is just under one-third of an acre, the second a quarter-acre, and the third just under two-thirds of an acre; a tract at Seaview Avenue and Valentine Street that is just and Valentine Street that is just under 1 acre; and a tract on Riverdale Avenue behind Ocean Avenue lots that is just under 1

The 1984 assessed values of the tracts range from $6,600 to $18,200 — figures which may reflect going market values only if the land is not buildable, according to one local realtor. Robert Post of Wishest Post tors in Holst of Weichert Realtors in Rumson speculated that most of the tracts may be too narrow to obtain borough development approval, but a few — the 2.6-acre piece, for one — could cost up to $120,000, he said.

The waterfront tracts earmarked for acquisition in the 1984 plan include a 200-footwide lot across from the New Jersey Marine Police facility, and several privately owned lots.

The plan also calls for the construction of three sets of stairs over the sea wall and one ramp for handicapped access. Stairways have been proposed for spots opposite Sunset Lane; Sea Crest Road and Park Road.

Again, the borough is waiting for federal and state funds to provide the stairways.

PET OF THE WEEK

If you are parents who waited for your children to get over the toddler stage before you let them have their own pet, "Hallie" could be for you. As workers at the Monmouth County Society for the Prevention of Cruelty Animals admit, she's not suited for a houseful of small children, but she's well-behaved and "really a good dog." She's a two-year-old mixed collie and shepherd, and she's had all her shots. She's also been spayed and is housebroken. All Hallie needs now is someone to give her a good home. If you feel yours is the family to give Hallie the love she needs, visit her at the SPCA in Eatontown from 1–5 p.m. any day except Thursday, or call the office at 542–0040.

Tax-overhaul talks move slowly

By JIM LUTHER

AP Tax Writer

WASHINGTON WASHINGTON — Congressional negotiators showed little progress yesterday in their efforts to write a compromise taxoverhaul plan, raising doubts that individual and corporate rates could be slashed as deeply as President Reagan and the Senate are demanding.

The 11 senators on the conference panel agreed among themselves on a list of 14 items that would raise $26 billion over five years. That money would be used to make up a $21-billion deficit in the Senate-passed bill and to provide an extra $5 billion of tax relief for middle-income tax-

But Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the conference, said, "There are some things on the list that my colleagues on the on the House side — will not

He said the $26-billion problem is just one obstacle the conference faces. Once that issue is agreed on — and Sen. Bob Packwood, R— Ore., chairman of the Senate del-egation, said that might come late tomorrow — the conferees could get on with settling the hundreds of differences between the bills passed by the two houses.

Among the 14 items on the Senate list is a provision that would further water down the deduction for state and local sales

Packwood raised the prospect that the conferees might be able to solve two problems at once by using part of the extra $5 billion for middle-income people to expand the number of middle-class workers eligible for deductible individual Retirement Accounts. The bill that passed the Senate would benefit only workers not The House and Senate delegations spent little time together yesterday, splitting up to give senators an opportunity to develop the $26-billion revenue-

"There has been no tangible, concrete progress this morning," Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., told reporters at midday on the sixth day of the conference.

Rep. Charles Rangel, D-N.Y., said the negotiations have made clear that the lawmakers will be unable to set tax rates in the final compromise as low as they are in the Senate bill.

Gephardt, Rangel and Rep. Donald Pease, D-Ohio, pointed up another major problem for the conference: The fact that under either bill, deductions would be reduced six months before tax rates were cut. That would mean a tax increase for millions of people, but it would cost another $29 billion to correct.

U.S. crime rate climbs 5 percent

"The baby boom began having kids and now you're getting the consequences of that," said James Fyfe, a senior fellow at the Police Foundation and an associate professor of and an associate professor of justice at American University.

The number of offenses reported to police in 1985 was 10 percent higher than in 1976, but 7 percent lower than in 1981,

"We have large in-migration of people in crime-prone ages in the South and West," explained

Alfred Blumstein, professor in the school of urban and public affairs at Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh.

Law enforcement agencies in the nation's cities registered a 4 percent increase in reported crime in 1985, while suburban counties recorded a 6 percent increase and rural counties a 2 percent rise.

Violent crimes of murder, forcible rape, robbery and aggravated assault were up apercent last year, and accounted for 11 percent of all reported crime. The remainder — property crimes of burglary, larceny-theft and motor vehicle theft — rose 5 percent.

The FBI issued a statement saying that after three straight years of decline, a "one-year increase (in crime) ... cannot be used as a predictor of a future statistical trend."

TEACHERS' AIDE — Brett Bixler, who works at Penn State University's Institute for the Study of Adult Literacy, displays a new computer program that uses a voice synthesizer to teach adults who cannot read basic skills.

Talking computer helps adult illiterates to read

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) -Adults who cannot read or write have a new friend in a talking computer program that can teach them the basics without making them feel ashamed about mistakes, researchers say. Developers of the program at Penn State University say it is the first computer-learning program designed for relatively inexpensive microcomputers and geared to adults who read below the fourth-grade level or not at all.

The computer talks to students, teaching them 1,000 often-used words or "survival words" that might appear on job applications or insurance forms, such as "spouse," "occupation" and "address."

The talking computer is a boon to adults because it is patient, repeating lessons as many times as necessary, and because "the computer doesn't make value judgments," said Connie Maclay, a research associate at Penn State's Institute for the Study of Adult Literacy who wrote the lesson plans.

With bright orange letters and sound, the computer pats them on the back with "good job," "great" or "wonderful" for correct responses and "sorry, try again" for incorrect ones.

It never says "You're wrong" something program developers say the adults have heard too often.

"It's a real status thing. It sounds really good to say, 'I'm working on a computer.' Nobody asks you what you're doing with it," Maclay said.

Roosevelt seeks Kennedy debate

OSTON (AP) — A grand-son of the late Franklin D. Roosevelt gambled the price of a half-hour of tele-vision time yesterday for a debate with Joseph P. Kennedy II, the nephew of another resident, who said he won't show up.

Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., who is retiring.

Kennedy, the front-runner in every poll so far, refused to be drawn into Roosevelt's plans, saying that a two-way debate would be unfair to the other candidates in the race.

Crack drug unit wars on crack

By RICK HAMPSON Associated Press

NEW YORK — In the short-hand of politics and tabloids, it is the war on crack. But not to the cop directing the battle against those who traffic in the smokable and highly addictive smokable and highly addictive form of cocaine.

"I hear a lot of talk about a war, but I don't know what that means," said Deputy Inspector Martin O'Boyle, head of the Police Department's 101 Crack Unit. "In a war you know who the enemy is, where to find him.

... He wears a different uniform."

Although the primary enemy is clear — the dealer who sells crack openly on a thousand street corners — O'Boyle's mission is complicated by the federal government's inability to halt the flow of the potent drug into the country, by the demand from users who range from Skid Row addicts to suburban teens to upscale professionals and by a public demanding immediate results.

After a group of black politi-cians and religious leaders "reclaimed" several drug loca-tions by standing watch for tions by standing watch for hours, comedian Dick Gregory asked law enforcers, "If a hand-ful of humble black folk with no weapons can make a corner drug-free, how come you can't do it?" In fact, the police have shown they can do it with "sweeps" like the highly publicized one on Manhattan's Lower East Side, where teams of uniformed and plainclothes officers made mass street arrests of buyers as well as sellers in an attempt to close a booming open-air drug mart. Although such tactics usually have a dramatic immediate impact, they require a large number of officers to sustain indefinitely, produce arrests that are less likely to result in long prison sentences, and often merely drive the problem elsewhere.

Sweeps, O'Bayle said, "make

As a result, Police Commissioner Benjamin Ward two months ago announced creation of the city-wide 101 crack unit, so called because it has 100 officers plus O'Boyle, who at 49 has spent hair his life on the force and half his career working narcotics.

Last Thursday, Ward announced that 100 extra narcotics officers would be assigned to the unit, and a 24-hour telephone line installed to accept calls from the public reporting calls from the public reporting the sale, possession or manufac-ture of crack.

O'Boyle said each team member would be replaced in his or her former unit by another officer, so the department's narcotics force was increased by 200 officers, not reshuffled.

The unit was told to make solid felony cases against those who sell crack, which has meant repeated undercover drug purchases, electronic surveillance, development of informers and applications for search warrants, all leading to an arrest or raid that produces enough evidence to convict.

an arrest or raid that produces enough evidence to convict.

Armed with apartment floor plans, battering rams, shotguns and no-knock search warrants, the unit has raided eight crack factories and 21 "crack houses" where the drug was sold and used. It has seized more than 20 ounces of the drug and made more than 600 felony arrests.

But the unit's impact remains unclear in a city whose Criminal Court is so crowded it has virtually ceased to function; whose special narcotics prosecutor says the police "can make more cases than I can handle;" where only 8 percent of narcotics offenders spend more than one night in jail.

Similarly, eight factories and 20 ounces of crack seem puny in a metropolitan area in which the federal Drug Enforcement. Administration says thousands of thousands of ounces each year.

crack mills process hundreds of thousands of ounces each year. So far the unit's raids have served primarily to illustrate the extent of the New York crack market. On O'Boyle's office wall are color pictures of a typical crack mill: that is, a typical kitchen, with all the tools needed to make crack from cocaine powder — a stovetop burner, a pan and a blender.

"You don't really need a blender," O'Boyle noted. "Some people just stir it with a knife."

The economics of crack are simple: the dealer buys an ounce of cocaine powder from a supof cocaine powder from a sup-plier for as much as $1,500. He converts the powder into crack, small flakes of which are packaged in about 450 small vials. These, in turn, are sold on the street for $10 each. Net profit — $3,000.

As a result, a lot of people are in the crack business. They include the half-dozen Colombian organized crime families which authorities say import most of the cocaine from South America.

They range on down to the 71-year-old man who was caught processing the drug in an apart-ment next to a Bronx school and to the many youngsters who are paid to watch for police, steer customers and recover empty vials.

Jason's work on Titanic was smash

WOODS HOLE, Mass. vision of the Titanic mission came vision of the Titanic mission came from human explorers, but the eyes belonged to Jason Jr. — a minature mechanical marvel that gave the world intimate views of the world's most famous ship—

The Navy-financed expedition yielded more than pretty pictures. Navy officials say the work of Jason Jr., a lawnmower-sized robot, brought them a step closer to safe searches for downed jets, sunken submarines or errant missiles on the sea bottom.

"I'd say (Jason Jr.) is a smashing success ... it went out and did what we advertised it would do," said Stewart E. Harris, a research specialist at the Deep Submergence Laboratory of the Woods Hole Oceanographic In-stitution, co-sponsor of the expedition.

The robot, remotely controlled by a tiny joy stick similar to those on video games, did have some problems. Its 250-foot tether twice became entangled in Titanic wreckage, and it was idle for two days after water seeped into the motor compartment. But re-searchers said such problems are expected on a test-run.

Jason Jr., which probed deep inside the Titanic, actually is the prototype of Jason, a robot still on the drawing boards. Jason will have two mechanical arms, a 20pound payload to take samples from the ocean floor and a twin-video camera system to create "stereo vision" images, said

The $1.5 million project should be completed by next summer. Scientists hope to tether Jason to Argo, a camera-equipped survey sled that would scan the ocean floor. Jason, "the flying eyeball," would be sent down for close-ups, especially in areas where access is difficult.

In the Titanic mission, Jason Jr. In the Titanic mission, Jason Jr. was attached to Alvin, a three-man research submarine. The unmanned Argo-Jason would permit long-range surveys without the time and safety constraints of manned missions, Harris said. He said Argo, which helped a U.S.-French team find the Titanic last September, already proved its worth. The unmanned sled, working nonstop over 12 days, covered an area of the East Pacific Rise, a ridge west of Mexico, that took scientists doing manned surveys more than 10 years to examine, he

The Argo-Jason system will be able to cover more than 98 percent of the oceans' floors, said Capt. Edward Craig, manager of the program for the Navy.

Maxwell said.

Harris said the equipment could help scientists probe the Mid-Ocean Ridge, a rugged, mountainous region that spans 40,000 miles from the middle of the Atlantic around the tip of Africa to the Indian and Pacific oceans.

Scientists hope surveys of the region, considered crucial to geo-logical research, and other geowill help them learn how the Earth is changing.

He compared the expedition to Jacques Cousteau's television

"Certainly the technology will be very useful not only for people like the Navy searching for wrecks, but also for scientific research... (But) just making the general public aware of the oceans is likely to be the most important thing," Maxwell said.

Robert Sexton, assistant to the dean of oceanography at the Uni-dean of oceanography at the University of Rhode Island, agreed.

"The public awareness of the oceans has kind of diminished in recent years," Sexton said. "We haven't had a hero since Cousteau. ... It's healthy for us to have a popular hero, and I wouldn't be suprised if oceanography schools experience an increase number of applicants because of this."

OCKINGTON, England
(AP) — A four-car train
filled with vacationers plowed into a van at an un-manned rail crossing in northeast England yesterday, killing at least nine people and injuring 42, police said.

More people were feared dead, their bodies trapped under the train.

The train from the seaside city of Bridlington to Hull was carrying nearly 200 people when it rammed the light truck at a grade crossing in Lock-ington village and three railroad cars jumped the tracks, British Rail said. One car overturned.

"The train started to careen to the left and suddenly it was on its side. The windows exploded and I hung on to one of the seats for my life," said 19-year-old passenger Ian Simpson.

He said two other people in his car were sucked through the windows. "They disap-peared under the train. There's no way they could have survived."

Bolivians cling to coca

Corp., said that in the midst of this crisis, cocaine money coming into the country has fueled inflation without contributing significantly to investment. Meanwhile, mining exports fell from about $500 million in 1976 to perhaps $100 million this year.

In addition to hurting the Bolivian economy, Zilveti said cocaine production harms the country's image abroad.

"When I go to Miami, they (U.S. customs agents) go through my suitcases with a fine-toothed comb, and I don't say anything because I understand," Zilveti said. "I agree with what they're doing. But they should try to eradicate the drug problem in the United States before they tell us

Fernando Illanes, Bolivian ambassador to Washington, said in a speech that coca production is worth so much for the peasant farmers that embracing the U.S. goal of crop eradication would create political and economic chaos. Bolivia will not do it, he said.

Facing pressure from Washing-ton to eradicate coca crops, which included a cutoff of $7.2 million in aid by Congress, Information Minister Antelo said Bolivis is trying to solve the problem through a broader attack, includ ing interdiction of cocaine labs, enticements to farmers to grow substitute crops and a national consciousness-raising program to alert Bolivians to the growing use of cocaine in this country.

The Wilentz debate

The controversy surrounding the reappointment of Chief Justice Robert Wilentz to the New Jersey Supreme Court has been unsavory, perhaps, but not altogether unwarranted.

In attempts to unseat the chief justice, Sen. Peter Garibaldi (R-Middlesex) has been unrelenting in his personal attacks on Wilentz, a Democrat. Garibaldi, who opposes the Wilentz court's Mount Laurel rulings, used "senatorial courtesy" and smeared Wilentz to deny him tenure. (Senatorial courtesy means a senator from a nominee's home county can block the nomination by refusing to "sign off" on it.) The dispute at times has smacked of gutter politics and, unfortunately, has cast something of a shadow on the state's highest court.

However, while Garibaldi's motives have been clearly political and his behavior less than statesmanlike, he has forced one issue that definitely needed to be aired in public. It is, simply, the question of where the chief justice chooses to live — in New Jersey or New York.

"On Thursday, Wilentz testified about his residency before the state Senate Judiciary Committee which is now weighing his renomination. (The committee took over after Senate Democrats decided senatorial courtesy cannot apply to sitting members of the Supreme Court.) And, in the process, the chief justice gave some painful details about his personal life.

Wilentz revealed that, in 1971, he sold a house in Perth Amboy and obtained two apartments, one in Manhattan and one in Perth Amboy.

The family also owned — and still owns — a summer home in Deal. He said that, between 1971 and 1979, he spent weekday nights in Perth Amboy and weekends in New York. But, he explained, his wife contracted cancer in 1980 and he spent more evenings with her than he had before. In 1984, he said, he realized he was spending

he said, he realized he was spending more time in New York than New Jersey, and has paid income taxes to both states for the last two years. By that time, Mrs. Wilentz had had numerous cancer operations and was starting chemotherapy. Last month, in fact, she became very ill and started a two-week hospital stay that ended July 11.

Wilentz, a native of Perth Amboy, told the senators he regards New Jersey as his home. But, under questioning, he refused to say he would become a full-time resident of New Jersey if his wife's health improves. Noting that she works in New York as an artist and benefits from living there, he said, "I am not going to do that to my wife."

THER VIEWS

The Wilentz story is at once human and tragic. Here's a man caught between career and family illness, between public demands and personal commitment. But, even though we all can feel deeply for the chief justice, the overriding question — of where public servants should reside — is still with us and, at some point, should be resolved.

Perhaps highly-placed public officials don't realize their residency has an enormous impact on those they serve. When they live outside the state, they're actually sending signals that the rest of us don't count for much—even though we're paying the bills. Gov. and Mrs. Kean, for instance, apparently have no idea how offensive it is to New Jersey residents that they have a summer home in New York. What it comes down to is an attitude, a certain arrogance that goes against the idea of teamwork and fairness. It flies in the face of the oaths these people take when they're sworn in — that we're all somehow in this mess together and they'll stick it

With that said, we nonetheless believe Wilentz should be returned as chief justice. Although we have not agreed with some rulings made by his court, we recognize that, as a jurist, he's held in high regard by his peers and has administered the state's judicial system professionally and capably. Though his residency in New York is objectionable, it should be overlooked now because of his personal circumstances, namely his wife's illness.

Moreover, the appointment should be made with all possible speed. Our state senators cannot permit the New Jersey Supreme Court to be mired by political infighting any longer. Mind you, we have no illusions about politics and the bench; most judges were effective politicians before they donned their robes. But the attacks on the chief justice by Garibaldi et al eventually could undermine the court itself if they're allowed to continue.

Finally, we hope the Wilentz debate will have done some good when it comes to the question of residency. Perhaps public servants in the future will think twice before they turn their backs on the rest of us and seek greener pastures beyond their bounds.

Senior cut days not to be tolerated

RUSSIA'S SECRET WEAPON

THE MILWAUREE JOURNAL Dist. News America Syndicate, 1986

To the Editor

A column in the June 22 Sunday Register by Dr. Joan Abrams, entitled "One Day Won't Hurt," brought some reservations to mind. Besides the far reaching implications of Dr. Abram's position on this issue, there are two major concerns I question.

The first is the implication that many schools tolerate and subversively condone senior cut days. Statements that indicate this include:

"... senior cut day is institutionalized in a lot of high schools."
"No doubt there will be no repercussions when the entire senior class absents itself because in numbers there is safety."

"... his teachers will probably not be happy with his presence either."
"Senior cut day has been happen-

"Senior cut day has been happening long enough for them to consider that day of half-vacation for them to be their perceptive?"

I respectfully suggest many secondary educators would, should and do resent these implications. There are many schools that work diligently to promote student attendance and take a very definite position against senior skip days.

The second position I question is the apparent rationalization of student behavior. "Senior cut day is a way of getting rid of excess spirits that might otherwise be used in a more damaging fashion."

The implication here is that if a

Today, more than ever, our educational system is under critical control of our society. cism from all sectors of our society. One of the positive outcomes of this revitalized concern for education has been the movement to raise standards and expectations of our students. The New Jersey State Department of Education has developed the "Effective Schools Pro-gram" to encourage districts to to encourage districts to establish appropriate student expectations. The New Jersey Legislature has passed a statute mandating student attendance. Local high school boards of education have adopted board policy and approved procedures relating to expectations of student attendance. Why, then, would we want to compromise our educational integrity by encouraging parents to condone unnecessary student absences and rationalizing student misbehavior?

One fact is clear; schools cannot provide the best education for students who are not present. I for one must question the foundation of a position that encourages any unnecessary student absence. The legal, professional and ethical ramifications would be detrimental to our educational system. Society may have changed, but if it is not a change to improve the development of our youth into more capable and productive individuals, we need to reassess our direction of change.

Although I am confident Dr.
Abrams did not and would not intend to compromise the integrity of our educational system, we in education must remain cognizant of our influence on youth and on the community. Expansion of Earle would be a bad deal

To the Editor

After attending the meeting at Monmouth College last night, for the building of a tank farm and the overall expansion of the Earle Base, I have come to the conclusion that the U.S. Navy has no right to expect a small community such as Leonardo, or the Township of Middletown, nor the State of New Jersey to shoulder the whole burden of supplying the whole U.S. Fleet in the European Theater with ammo and fuel.

It makes me think we have voted in politicians who lure projects such as these to sell their land for government use, lining their pockets mindless of the consequences and heeding only their own greed. It is most alarming.

The fallacy that these dangerous projects create jobs and expand good growth is a joke. Most of all workers come from out of state, not Leonardo, Belford or Middletown.

Last, the all-present ratables that Middletown is constantly worrying about will have to be de-

Imported clothes hurt local economy

To the Editor:

I would like to draw your attention to an important problem here in the Long Branch, Red Bank, Asbury Park area — the problem of apparel imports and how they are affecting our communities.

In the last five years, apparel imports have doubled. They now account for more than half of the clothing sold in America. And as imports increase, American garment workers, including those in the Long Branch, Red Bank and Asbury Park area, are thrown out of work.

There is also a hidden cost of imports. Fewer jobs in our communities mean less spending in the stores here. People do not have money to be independent financially; therefore, there is a greater burden on local support programs.

Yet when imported garments ap-

Yet when imported garments appear in the stores, they sell at the same price as American made garments. Only the retailer, the middleman and the importer benefit.

Last year, Congress voted in favor of the Textile and Apparel Trade Enforcement Act, to freeze imports at their current level, and then to let them grow only as fast as the market grows. President Reagan vetoed this bill, but Congress will vote on whether or not to override the veto on Aug. 6. Congress has taken steps to conserve needed jobs; it deserves all the support we can give it.

Homeport vote The proposed homeport for the trading in Congress, and why issues hattleship lowe on Staten Island is are so calden debated on the project battleship Iowa on Staten Island is up before the Senate. The Armed Services Committee has voted in favor, but now the full Senate has to approve.

That won't be the last hurdle: The House of Representatives, which has finished next year's defense appropriations bill, dropped the homeport proposal. If the Senate goes the other way, the matter will be resolved in a joint committee.

But the Senate's vote is crucial. Everyone wants to save money, and many senators can think of no better economy than sticking it to New York. States with fewer people than any of the five boroughs have two senators each and much enjoy the power that unrepresentative system gives them.

That's why there's so much horse-trading in Congress, and why issues are so seldom debated on the merits. Thus, because Sen. Moynihan led the fight to save the exemption for local sales taxes in the tax reform bill, states with no income tax (Texas, for example), which raise most of their revenue from sales tax, owe him one.

The homeport should be defended on its merits, not because it will bring in dollar and jobs. If America's military needs mean that battleships have a role and that the best place to put one isn't Charleston or Norfolk but New York harbor, then the homeport should be approved.

That's the decision the President, the Pentagon and the Senate Armed Services Committee have reached. It should prevail.

Don't get mad at LaRouchites — get even

The best way to understand the LaRouchites — how they think and operate — is to get them mad at you. In that sense, I've been fortunate, because they've been mad at me for years.

Long before their fluke victories in the Illinois primary made them well-known, I was writing about their sleazy attacks on public figures — labeling certain female politicians as prostitutes and their bushenders invested the second their bushenders. their husbands as pimps — and the way they conned people into giving them money.

Their response was to threaten to murder a cat belonging to a reporter who worked for me. They never followed through on the threat, possibly because they discovered that the cat had not been declawed.

declawed.

Of course, they are capable of catkilling, as they demonstrated in New Hampshire, where a reporter wrote a series of articles on their lunacy. Every day that an article appeared, a dead cat was dropped on his doorstep.

So, I wasn't surprised when a group of LaRouchites showed up in front of my office building the other day. No dead cats, this time, but they were chanting and passing out handbills. Their chants consisted of something like: "Why hasn't Royko taken the AIDS test? What is he hiding?"

This has become a standard part of the LaRouchites' patter. If a reporter puts a hard question to Mark Fairchild or Janice Hart — the two non-entities who won the primaries in Illinois — they respond by demanding that he take an AIDS test.

In addition, I would like them to take a series of financial tests. It would be interesting to learn how Hart and other LaRouchites have managed to survive year after year without having any taxable income.

And these financial tests would also include their explaining why they have taken to conning elderly people — some senile — into making sizable "loans" that have never been repaid.

From all over the country, reports are coming in about elderly people who mistakenly believed they were lending money because the fast-talking LaRouchites convinced them America was in danger of financial collapse, or was in danger of financial collapse, or drug-pushers were taking over the world, or the Russians were coming and the LaRouchites were going to fight them

It's now clear that for years the LaRouchites have been operating a multimillion-dollar con game.

What makes it almost funny is that most of the victims were political conservatives who didn't have the faintest idea that their money was being funneled

And, of course, they claim that they are great crusaders against drugs. They collected a lot of money from people who believed them, until several suburban police departments stopped them from conning people in their communities.

In fairness, though, I have to concede that they probably know something about drugs and the profits that can be made by drug-pushers.

After all, Ms. Hart recently had to get a new lawyer to represent her in court because her former lawyer was recently convicted of being part of a giant national drug-smuggling ring.

So, I'll be happy to take a drug test if Ms. Hart will explain why she chose to be represented by a big-time dope-pusher. One other thing. In their handbill, they used the slogan of the Fairchild-Hart campaign.

Some GOP leaders pushing for Reagan 3rd term

WASHINGTON — You lived through reel one, "Ronbo Comes to Washington." You endured the 1984 rerun, "Ronbo's Landslide." Ready for a glorious 1988 sequel, "Ronbo Goes for There"?

for Three"?
Would you consider a third Ronald Reagan term (1) preposterous, (2) wonderful, (3) mind-numbing?

Well, brace yourself. Some Republicans are dreaming of re-jiggering the Constitution to allow a president to serve more than two consecutive terms. Their aim is to keep Reagan, health permitting, on the job until 1992.

Word of this movement has spread to the boondocks, where enamored Reagan devotees lust to make him a semi-permanent president.

These are addicts for whom eight years of Contra raids, Star Wars, big deficits and folksy jokes about age leave a craving for more. Or maybe they don't like George Bush.

"Four more years! Four more years!" Reagan's speeches in the South last week were halted repeatedly by admirers bellowing such

"OK, you've convinced me to run again," Reagan said in Dallas. "Only kidding, of

Rep. Guy Vander Jagt, R-Mich, hopes his hero isn't kidding. Head of the National Republican Campaign Committee, Vander Jagt sent 300,000 letters nationally urging a petition to junk the 22nd Amendment (a two-term presidential limit) so

Reagan can run one more time.

Reagan can run one more time.

"I don't know about you," wrote Vander Jagt, "but with the Soviets flexing their military muscles and madmen like Moammar Gadhafi on the loose, I rest easier knowing Ronald Reagan is my President. ... Put simply, he's one of the greatest Americans of all time, and we should try to hold onto him."

Cynics say Vander Jagt is using a creative gimmick to raise dough. His letter closes with a money pitch for GOP candidates.

"No, he's serious," insists NRCC spokeswoman Barbara Purdue. "It's too early to gauge the response. But the phones are going crazy with enthusiastic calls."

Vander Jagt vows that with enough support

Vander Jagt vows that with enough support he'll "personally introduce legislation to repeal the 22nd Amendment ... even the president's strongest opponents can't stand in the griped. "They send senators up here for 30 or 40 years, congressmen the same."

Granted his lame-duck complaint is reasonable, I'd disagree with Reagan about an open-ended presidency. I think Vander Jagt has a terrible idea, and not only for Reagan. To paraphrase Lord Acton's famous phrase, "Power tends to corrupt, and a 12-year presidency would corrupt absolutely."

Checking back to the bitterly hot 1947 debate that led to the 22nd Amendment, it's obvious Republicans took a whack at the four-term ghost of Franklin D. Roosevelt. Democrats argued, "Why change something that's worked for 150 years. "Trust the people, don't put them in a straitjacket."

But Republicans, even if motivated by vengeance, had it right in limiting the presidency. Washington and Jefferson, who feared a monarchy, set the two-term tradition.

feared a monarchy, set the two-term tradition. After the entrenched omnipotence of FDR's reign, those '47 Republicans discovered the Founding Fathers were smart old birds.

Reagan is the best argument against a limitless presidency.

And when any politician is in power too long — whether Richard Daley or Baby Doc — you get corruption, apathy and arrogance.

So let Ron go peacefully to the ranch after '88. And dig a hole for Vander Jagt's foolish

By LARS-ERIK NELSON

WASHINGTON publican senator from Nevada, Paul Laxalt owes a political and historic debt to both Abraham Lincoln and Bugsy Siegel, which, as the bookies in Vegas might tell you, is a strange parlay.

Stranger things are yet to come:
Laxalt is considering a run for the presidency in 1988, despite what a casual observer might deem to be fatal handicaps and baffling contradictions.

Laxalt is both a staunch conervative and a live-and-let-live Vestern libertarian. He is a Catholic moralist who favors organized school prayer and a constitutional amendment banning abortion — and yet, he has been divorced and he defends both gambling and legalized prostitution.

Voila! The perfect man to bridge the philosophical split in the Republican Party between fundamentalist Christians and go-go Sun Belt capitalists, the odd-couple combination that apparently favors taking government off ly favors taking government off your back and putting it inside your head.

"Is it possible to have feet in both camps, the moralists' and the libertarians'?" I asked him recent— ly. "That's where I am," he replied easily. "If it's not tenable, I'm in deep trouble."

Laxalt has attributes that would compel oddsmakers to rank him as a serious contender in 1988. He is one of President Reagan's closest one of Fresident Reagan's closest friends. He is closer to Reagan ideologically and in personality than any of the current crop of GOP front-runners, and he is likelier than any of his rivals to have the loyalties of the political strategists and fund-raisers who halved Reagan with the nomination. helped Reagan win the nomination in 1980.

First, back to the historical debts, for they explain some of the contradictions about Laxalt.

Nevada was admitted to the union in 1864 because Republicans thought they might need the electoral votes to assure Lincoln's reelection. No matter that the preceding census had shown a population totaling 6,857 — most of them miners, who were a rowdy of them miners, who were a rowdy lot given to games of chance and After World War I, the state declined — until casino gambling was legalized. Bugsy Siegel built the Flamingo, the first big Las Vegas casino, just after World War

II.

Prostitution is legal at the discretion of local authorities. Las Vegas reportedly has the highest teen-age venereal disease rate in the country. The state owes its prosperity and much of its population to what large numbers of Americans would regard as sin—and what Laxalt regards as "recreation."

Why would he want to run for the White House? "The strongest reason for me would be to ensure and policies are perpetuated beyond Reagan's term," he said. "But if I ran, it would not be simply as a rubber stamp of Reagan."

How would he differ from Reagan? He doesn't say. No matter. Neither do George Bush, Howard Baker, Jack Kemp, Pat Robertson, Robert Dole, all of whom promise that as president they would be Reagan — but different.
What will truly push Laxalt into Reagan — but different.

What will truly push Laxalt intothe race, he said, is if he sees that Bush or Kemp is stumbling and likely to lose the general election.
If that should happen, and if he can raise $8 million to $10 million up front, he's probably going to run. "The key will be whether or not the funding is there," he said.

This means Laxalt is counting on the loyalties of Nancy Reynolds, Lyn Nofziger, Richard Wirthlin and Ed Rollins, the professionals most closely associated with Reagan's 1980 victory. Laxalt himself was head of Reagan's unsuccessful campaign for the nomination in 1976 and of his winning campaign in 1986 and of his winning campaign in 1986. his winning campaign in 1980, so he knows what it takes to win a nomination Sometime later this year, Laxalt

Los Angeles: City of endless traffic jan

LOS ANGELES — The battle is over, the war is lost. The biggest traffic jam in the nation is only traffic jam in the nation is only going to get worse.

"In the Los Angeles area, we cannot, in our wildest dreams, solve the traffic problem," said Dale Ratzlaff, senior transportation planner for the state Department of Transportation. "No matter how many freeways we build, it's only going to get worse." Forget New York. Forget Houston. When it comes to congestion— 10 lanes of traffic at an absolute standstill— L.A. has everybody beat.

everybody beat.

There is a myth that the free-ways in Southern California are wonderful. The freeways are great, but the traffic is horrendous and getting worse.

"At the rate L.A. is growing, it's going to take everything we can do to simply keep the transportation system we have from becoming obsolete," said Larry Foutz, a transportation planner with the Southern California Association of Governments

The statistics are staggering. The statistics are staggering.
The freeways in the six-county
Los Angeles area, most of which were built between the 1940s and the 1960s, cover a greater distance than the 1,500-mile Great Wall of China. But they are not enough.

Just about all the freeways are seriously overcrowded during pack parids and just over peak periods and just ov-ercrowded the rest of the time. Only one new freeway is planned for the metropolitan area, and no one expects it to make much difference.

"It will be jammed the second it opens," said Steve Guhin, director of planning and research for the Federal Highway Adminis-tration's California office.

The busiest traffic interchange in the nation — "in the world," Foutz says — is the crossing of the Ventura and San Diego freeways in the San Fernando Valley. The busiest traffic intersection of surface streets in the world is in the face streets in the world is in the west end of Los Angeles.

There are more licensed drivers here than anywhere else in the United States — nearly 8 million. The most cars are here, too about 7.5 million. Both statistics come courtesy of Foutz's organiza-

There's more: There are more vehicles per square mile between Los Angeles and Long Beach, Calif. — 3,040 — than in any other area in the country, according to the U.S. Census Bureau. There are more vehicles per household — 2.23 — in Simi Valley, Calif., just northwest of Los Angeles, than any other area nationwide.

And one last driving statistic, from the Southern California Association of Governments: All those who go from place to place in the six-county Los Angeles are a read ways to the six-county and the six-county Los Angeles are a read to the six-county Los Angeles are a read to the six-county Los Angeles are a read to the six-county Los Angeles are travel more than twice the distance from the Earth to the sun — daily.

So what's a person to do?
"I just stay off the freeways," said Larry Cohen, a former South Philadelphian who moved here nine years ago. "I heard they were brutal, and they are. I use them in off-hours, but most of the time I use the surface streets and drive

use the surface streets, and driving is a pleasure."

Cohen, however, does not commute to work, which is probably the reason for his enjoyment of driving

"The trips are so long here," Ratzlaff said. "Ten, 20 years ago, people would move every five years. But now people do not move because it's too expensive. So when they change jobs, they just drive farther and farther. "There's also no dense corridor of employment here. The employ-ment is spread out everywhere. You know, we have the largest bus fleet in the country, but because everything is so spread out, the bus frequency isn't that great. And people just do not perceive public transit as an alternative."

The spreading out of employ-ment and housing means longer and longer commutes and longer and longer rush hours.

"The rush hour here is three hours in the morning and four hours in the afternoon," Foutz said. "It might be more intense in Houston for an hour, but it lasts longer here."

The longer rush hours, higher volume and erratic drivers make volume and erratic drivers make the freeways here more of a challenge because you're never quite sure when things will come to a grinding halt.

"On the East Coast, if traffic is at a standstill, you know there's been an accident," said Bob Young, a former comic in Philadelphia who now is an L.A. based television writer and producer. "But here, traffic stops and you don't know why. You move ahead and there's no accident. It's illusory, like a wave in a stadium or a traffic mirage."

The traffic is no mirage to Marilyn Litvak, a travel agent who commutes on the freeway 38 miles daily from Palos Verdes to Pasadena during the morning and on a good day, the commute takes about an hour. Lately it's been taking an hour and 20 minutes.

"I don't know what's going on. I just put KUSC on the radio (a classical-music station), stay in one lane of the Harbor Freeway and go. I don't weave in and out. I drive with blinders on, I guess." Although Ratzlaff and Foutz say the battle is lost, neither man is a quitter. More car pooling would help (78 percent of the cars, have just one occupant). Staggered working hours, special high-oc-cupancy traffic lanes, creating more freeway lanes by narrowing existing ones and people working at home with computers will all slow a worsening situation, Ratzlaff said.

The coming of Metro Rail, Southern California's first subway, appears to be a reality with the recent release of federal funds for the first leg of the $3.3

billion project. When completed, the subway, 18.6 miles long, will stretch from downtown Los An-geles northwest into the San Fernando Valley.

Boeing aircraft flying high in its 70th year

Associated Press

SEATTLE - Outside the hangars of Boeing Co.'s Plant 2 are a pair of radar jets in Air Force gray and a dozen new passenger planes, tails bright with the livery of airlines from around the globe.

It's a barometer of prosperity for a community whose economy is tied to the fate of the world's largest commercial jetmaker, and whose residents remember the harsh times when few planes were hard times.

Boeing, riding a record year of orders in 1985 for 390 aircraft worth nearly $15 billion, forecasts 1986 orders to exceed $16 billion. At the end of 1985, the company had a backlog of $25 billion in orders, and a cash reserve of nearly $3.2 billion.

Boeing stock recently was trading above $60 a share, a six-fold increase in four years.

For the first four months of 1986, Boeing claimed 70 percent of publicly announced commercial aircraft orders. Thomas Craig, market research director for the company's Boeing Commercial Airplane Co. subsidiary, predicted it would retain a 55 percent market share of all new airplanes sold. UNDER CONSTRUCTION — This view shows Boeing 737s being built recently at the planes this year. Although famous for the gigantic 747, Boeing has sold the most of its company's Renton, Wash. plant. Boeing has received orders totaling $15 billion for 390 two smallest planes, the 727 and the 737.

Today, Boeing is working on a new generation of warplanes and passenger jets, most notably the Advanced Tactical Fighter and the 7J7 airplanes, that could reap billions of dollars in business.

Boeing works on bombers in Wichita, Kan., builds helicopters in Philadelphia, tests space capsules in Huntsville, Ala., and, with its recent acquisition of de Havilland Aircraft, makes commuter planes near Toronto.

Boeing employs about 111,300 people, with about 78,200 in Washington state. Employment has climbed by more than 25 percent since 1984, with more than 7,200 added this year.

Shrontz says making planes and weapons is a cyclical business.

"We have been very fortunate in recent years that the defense business has been down and the commercial has been up and to some extent vice versa," he says, "and that has certainly provided the major stability that we didn't have when both went down together.

"For the easily foreseeable furor the easily foreseeable fu-ture, what I see happening is a leveling off of the defense busi-ness growth if not an actual decline and an increasing growth on the commercial side."

In the late 1960s, Boeing's Seattle and Everett employment fell from 104,000 to 37,200 in little more than three years when sales skidded in a national recession and Boeing lost several key military contracts.

In 1968, Boeing accounted for 34.7 percent of Washington state's manufacturing employment. The

"One positive thing that's happened in the community is that we are no longer that big a factor that we were in the late 1960s on the Seattle economy," Shrontz says. Should Boeing nosedive again, "I think there would be more of a cushioning effect than there was at the time."

One way to stabilize business is to share risk. Boeing has entered a joint venture with a group of

Japanese manufacturers to develop the 7J7, a high-tech civilian aircraft that will be driven by two advanced prop-jet engines.

Boeing also is teaming with Sikorsky to develop the proposed LHX military light helicopter, and in early July announced it would join with General Dynamics and Lockheed to bid for the Advanced Tactical Fighter.

Shrontz rejects arguments that

Boeing may be laying the basis for a Japanese aerospace industry through the 7J7 deal, thereby spawning a potentially fierce

Coast-to-coast flight in hour a reality soon

Popular Mechanics

A space plane that can fly from New York to Tokyo in two hours, and from New York to Los Angeles in less than an hour, is expected to be in the air within the next 10

The technologies for the space plane — what President Reagan calls the Orient Express — are all in place, retired Air Force Gen. Chuck Yeager wrote in the August ssue of Popular Mechanics, and it is just a matter of putting the pieces together.

Yeager, the test pilot who was the first man to break the sound barrier, said the first Orient Express would be a Mach 5 plane, with a Mach 25 plane in flight before the year 2000.

Over the next five years, he wrote, the U.S. will develop the X-31 test plane, which will be used to demonstrate new propulsion technologies, advanced metals and aerodynamic designs.

He said the fastest jet plane now in the air flies a little faster than 2000 mph, which is Mach 3. To get beyond that speed, the air turbo ramjet — a new technology that has been tested in ground-based labs but not yet in the air — may provide the first important leap forward.

Aerospace engineers believe the ramjet could be the first Orient Express engine, providing enough power for Mach 5 flight. NASA researchers, meantime, are work-Express engine, called the scram-jet, that could keep a plane flying at Mach 8 and beyond, with Mach 25 a target within the next decade.

"It is likely a future Orient Express," Yeager wrote, "in operation by the late 1990s, would operate as a Trans-Atmospheric Vehicle (TAV). It would take off horizontally, like an ordinary aircraft, sweep up into the high atmosphere at Mach 8 or so, leave the atmosphere and speed up to Mach 25, then slow down as it made its landing.

"The flight of a TAV, like the typical New York to Washington shuttle jets of today, would be mostly takeoff and landing. Less than half the trip would be spent than half the trip would be spent in level flight."

He said major changes would have to be made in airframes to make the craft as light as possible but also able to withstand extreme stress from temperature, pressure and gravitational forces.

'Inside the Orient Express," he said, "be it a Mach 5 craft or a Mach 25, I foresee no major changes. The basic design of today's aircraft would be comfortable at any speed."

He predicted significant changes in airport design, because the Orient Express will require a three-mile landing strip instead of the two-mile strip at today's international airports.

"I can envision a new floating airport built on an artificial island off New York City," he wrote. "And the Japanese already have such an airport planned for the Tokyo area."

Yeager hopes for other airport

reager nopes for other airport improvements.

"Today's airports take almost as much time just to get to as the flight itself takes," he said. "That makes no sense.

"Many of the current airports don't have enough runways. New airports for the Orient Express And new airports, especially of-fshore projects, could be more environmentally sound, too."

The Orient Express, he predicted, will become the leading edge of a new aerospace revolution.

Sylvan

Because success begins with the basics

Low-cost student loans from Shadow Lawn

Sylvan understands how tough it Scan be for a child who's falling behind in school. And how good it can feel when failure turns into success.

This summer, we can help

your child develop the self-confidence—and the courage—to do better in school next fall. In fact, we guarantee it.

Shadow Lawn Savings -- always finding better ways to serve you!"

A Shadow Lawn Savings Higher Education Guaranteed Student Loan will help cover the cost of virtually everything associated with higher education -- tuition, books, room and board, and travel expenses. Students needn't think about repayment until after graduation, and repayment terms are available that will fit a modest budget.

As an undergraduate student you may borrow up to $2,500 per academic year, and if you are a graduate student you may borrow up to $5,000 per academic year.

NEED ADDITIONAL EDUCATIONAL FUNDS?

If you already have a Shadow Lawn student loan, now is the time to see about borrowing additional funds to continue your education. In addition, Shadow Lawn also offers PLUS Loans to further help defer the cost of education for both qualifying students and parents.

Even with a wide array of student loan programs available, you still may need additional assistance. Ask how our Equity Line of Credit can help finance that important college education. For more information call 222-1100 and ask for our Student Loan Department or apply in person at our Administrative Office on Monmouth and Parker Roads in West Long Branch, or at any of our conveniently located offices.

A salute to the lucky six WINNERS of our search for romance

Carolyn Fraser is an eighties-style lady with a silk and pearls lifestyle that includes a stimulating career as a copywriter and her own hilltop condo in Highlands.

But at 28, the blue-eyed blonde hears the sweet bird of youth flapping its wings impatiently, urging her to get on with it. That biological clock is ticking towards (oh no!)

Find someone, it says — someone "cultured but not effete, educated but not pedantic." Someone both hand-some and athletic who possesses a "wickedly mordant"

And, since it's HER fantasy, after all, he should, if possible, be named Biff or Bucky.

This Biff person, Fraser says, should be a cross between Don Johnson, Woody Allen and William Buckley. And he should possess such sang frois that he would pas no faux in her company.

Story by Eileen Moon Photos by Register staff

At 26, Betty Mahon had grown tired of looking for love in all the wrong places.

The singles bars were full of false loves, and as a busy career woman commuting to New York City, she had few hours to devote to searching for that special someone.

A few of her friends in similar positions had attempted to solve their romantic problems by placing personal ads. But Betty wasn't sure she wanted to take that risk.

When she spot-ted The Register's Search For Summer Romance contest, it sounded like a fun, less risky way to seek the man of her dreams. And with The Register's Love Experts doing the choosing, Mahon reasoned, this might be the summer her search for romance is rewarded.

Mahon enjoys movies, music, sports, traveling and the feeling of sand between her toes.

See Betty, Page12C

When Jeannie Martin received the call from The Register telling her that her search for romance had been successful, she yelled to her children, "Hey kids — they found me a

Not that Jeannie's that desperate. But it The Register could find her ideal man—someone who's a cross between Jimi Hendrix and Rudolph Nureyev—then, Jeannie figured, "It must be fate!"

The blue—eyed Jeannie, 47, has been divorced for six years. But she hasn't been all alone by the telephone all that time. A psychiatric nurse, Jeannie loves her work and fills her spare time with activities like fishing, camping, crabbing and reading. Her favorite authors include Joyce Carol Oates, Harian Ellison and Erich Maria Remarque.

veryone's looking for love but some — as witnessed by the dozens of men and women who entered The Register's Summer Romance Contest — are more industrious about it than others. And why not? Summer is the perfect time for alliances and dalliances, and if a chance encounter leads to a more lasting relationship, then those people may count themselves lucky to have perservered in the game of

What are people looking for today? According to the letters The Register's love experts received, just one thing: A good friend to share life's joys and sorrows. Of course, there are those who want to see your bank statement or car before they will consider a date, but they seem increasingly few and far between.

The three women shown here were matched with the three men on the back page by The Register's panel of four love experts. The matchmakers spent an entire evening without food or drink, driven by their mission of finding among the entrants three compatible couples.

The criteria? Simply a zest for life, an appetite for adventure, and a succint ability to expose their innermost dreams to a bunch of strangers. Those the panel considered too finicky and picky did not fare well. When it comes to love, the panel concluded that people must leave themselves open to possibility and the six who won seemed to sense this.

But for love to blossom, the love experts reasoned, there must be a mood. And what better way to create one than to send the winners on a lovely, private limousine ride to three of the most romantic restaurants in Monmouth County with nosegays and boutonnierres provided by Riverview Florist of Red Bank.

The Fromagerie in Rumson seemed the perfect setting for Betty Mahon and Thomas Morse. They are young and dreamy—eyed and The Register's cupids thought the elegant ambiance would be ideal for them. They were sent on their way in a white super stretch Lincoln provided by De' Elegance Limousine of Rejektour

The Pear Tree in Rumson, on the other hand, is a little brighter and seemed just right for Jeannie Martin and Joseph Church, who though older than the rest, sounded in many ways a little more lively. A white stretch limousine driven by Jeff Sauter of Esquire Limousine Service of Colts Neck carried them to their dream date and back.

Carolyn Fraser and Charles Horowitz were off to The Shadowbrook in Shrewsbury because with their sense of aesthetics, the love experts thought they would appreciate the splendor of the former mansion. The couple was whisked there in a silver stretch limo driven by Tom McGuire of Celebrity Limousine Service of Red Bank.

How did they fare? Who knows. We provided the setting. The rest was up to them.

The Garden State Arts Center Foundation Fund has been busy again. On Thursday night it staged a gala disco party featuring Julio Iglesias, the Spanish singer, as the special guest and the crowd, especially the ladies, went wild.

Not a few of the ladies present wished they were in Judith's shoes that night as she huddled at a table with the Latin heart-throb. August 7 will be the 9th Annual Golf Tournament to benefit Christian Brothers Academy (CBA). According to Cathy Tlerney, Shrewsbury, it will be held at Navesink Country Club and will feature two shot guns and will be open to both men and women. In case you don't know, a shot gun start is when everyone tees off at the same time, only on different holes. This year's chairman is Paul Richardson from Middletown. Balley Davis, Shrewsbury, is chairman of the prize committee, which has always procured wonderful items due to the generosity of its sponsors. All the prizes are donated and if you would like to donate one, please call 747–1959. They're expecting close to 200 players who will enjoy lunch and cocktails afterwards during the award ceremony. Co-chair Brother Michael Monmouth Kids, decided with his brother, Jim Plasteras, to hold a fundraiser for the organization at his restaurant two weeks ago. It was touted as a Greek night with all Greek food cooked by Basil's mom, Marguerite Plasteras; his wife Ann, who though not Greek, has in the 14 years she's been married to Basil, learned to master Greek cuisine; and Helen Karagias, Basil's partner's wife. After some thought, Basil, who is also on the West Long Branch First Aid Building Fund Committee, decided to combine the Monmouth Kids fundraiser with one for the building fund committee. More than 380 people showed up. Perhaps it was due to Basil's reputation as an excellent restauranteur and the price was also right at only $25 per person. But more than $13,000 was raised that night, with $6,500 going to each organization.

She once traveled from Ohio to Arizona and her life was never the same again. For the rest of her existence, her body went to bed at 7 in the evening and raced for the paper and breakfast at 3 a.m. She blames that single trip for putting an end to her family life, social interaction, and a general breakdown of her body clock which eventually contributed to her demise.

I have just returned from a vacation to Indonesia and am in the process of having my aunt's birthday declared a legal holiday. The woman was an apostle of truth, a prophet in our time, a role model for oracles. I know now that my body will never again respond to a single command from me. Like Mother Nature, it is not nice to fool it.

Mixing two groups

Looking at the pictures of Caroline Kennedy Schlossberg wedding, I was reminded of my wedding, I was reminded of my niece's nuptials 15 years ago. Coming from a family who pursued Judaism with as much rigor as her groom's family observed their Catholicism she is the first, and to this date, the only member of the family who has married outside the religion.

One cannot say both families did not have time to get used to the idea of their union. Francine met Barry when they were both about 16. Through high school and the long years when he was away at college, they remained true to each other. Finally, the education of both of them complete, they married. In spite of the years of adjustment, when the time came, both families found it difficult to accept the situation.

At that time a priest and a rabbi could not be found who would marry them in a church or a synagogue. Great efforts had to be made to meet the needs of family members. A hall was hired and the ceremony, which included neither a mass nor a full Jewish ceremony was a compromise acceptable to ecumenically-oriented clergymen but" unacceptable to the con-servative wings of both families. There were those who didn't consider them truly maried and those who wouldn't eat because the food wasn't kosher and those who wouldn't dance and those on both sides who wouldn't even come to the wedding. In spite of all that, it was a ceremony filled with the beauty and love of two young In the years that have gone by since Fran and Barry married they've had twin daughters who a tribute to the intelligence and nurture of their home. Most of the old people who objected most strongly to the marriage have died, but Barry and Fran's love lives on strongly in their lives and in their girls. In the meantime, intermarriage has become much intermarriage has become much more common. I have to recognize that my son, who was of bar mitzvah age when his cousin married and my daughter, who was barely more than a baby, may very well marry outside of Judaism. While my husband and I might prefer it otherwise, we realize that such marriages attack the one area of religion that has always troubled us, the idea of the outsider versus "us." Intermarriage erases lines between "us" and "them" because intermarriage breaks down some of the marriage breaks down some of the rituals that keep people apart and engender hate.

As an educator, I am frequently asked about how to provide for the religious education of children. I can only respond that I would not have them exposed to any teaching that does not recognize the universality of humanity and of what constitutes moraliamong people. I would not have them learn arrogance or prejudice against others because they belong to a different sect. I would have them engaged in the great eternal moral issues of how people deal with each other and with the cosmos. While I may find these concerns examined in Judaism I know they exist in other religions

As I watched television reports of the Kennedy/Schlossberg wedding, I could not help but have wished that Schlossberg had chosen to have a rabbi present. It would have been a lesson in ecumenicism and forbearance for all of us.

Teach your children the ABCs of investing their money

Changing Times

When your children finally find themselves with apron — and financial — strings cut, will they know how to make their money grow through investment? Yes, if u've taught them some invest-you've taught them some invest-ing lessons. Your children have a head start if you are already a knowledge-able investor because you can apie investor because you can share your own experiences and enthusiasm. Age is a factor, and 12 or 13 seems to be a common time for children to begin to both understand and appreciate the concepts of investing.

, How much money is available is important, too, says Changing Times. Some youngsters have gen-erous parents or grandparents; others invest their own earnings.
A child who needs his or her nioney for dating or buying clothes won't be interested in a long-term investment.

Many kids get hooked on the stock market as a result of a junior high or high school project, often an economics or social studies churse. A classroom project called the Stock Market Game, in which teams of students acquire a hypothetical portfolio of stocks forth $100,000, was played na onwide by about 200,000 stu-ents this past school year. The ame is so successful that there re numerous reports of kids ersuading their parents to help persuading their parents to neip them invest for real.

School can help stimulate interest, but real investments and interest, but real investments and agenerous amount of your time are keys to keeping your kids involved. If your children start expressing interest in the financial world beyond the bank, take that as a cue to encourage them. If you're not sure they're mature or knowledgeable enough, you could give them a tryout. One father had his son play the market on paper for a year, and then limited his initial investment to $500.

nitial investment to $500.

When kids first invest, they like p pick companies whose names hey're familiar with. That can be good strategy for investors

Because kids are dealing with a limited amount of money, they often favor purchasing more shares of a lower-priced stock rather than a high-priced blue chip. But you should steer them away from investing in a speculative stock with no current earnings and little future prospects. One lesson you'll want them to learn early is that the point of equity investing is to outperform the more predictable yield of the more predictable yield of fixed-income securities. A fairly modest growth of 15 percent or so in value each year will be a good achievement — beating inflation handsomely and doing better thar savings accounts and most bonds.

A big problem with buying individual stocks is that unless you have a sympathetic broker willing to give a break on transaction fees, ordering small lots of shares can outsily set into profits quickly eat into profits.

One grandfather solved that by buying his grandchildrens' stock through the low-cost investment plan of the National Association of Investors Corp. (1515 E. Eleven Mile Rd., Royal Oak, MI 48067). For the price of the shares and a one-time fee of $5 per company, members of NAIC can buy into one of more than two dozen com-panies' dividend reinvestment plans. NAIC also sponsors invest-ment clubs, in which members pool their money to buy a club portfolio. Some clubs extend membership to students, provid-ing both an education and an inexpensive way to play the market.

Similarly, Merrill Lynch's
Sharebuilder Plan, (800)

and permits investing in stocks, mutual funds or precious metals
by the doller are out rather than by the dollar amount rather than by share or ounce. Choices include thousands of stocks on the New York or American stock exchanges and nearly 1,000 over-thecounter stocks. The minimum stock purchase is $25, and after an initial investment of $100, the minimum is $50 for mutual funds or precious metals.

Your child can also bypass most fees and avoid some paperwork by investing in a mutual fund instead of individual stocks. When older children of clients accumulate several hundred dollars, Indianapolis financial planner Gary Pittsford recommends investing the money in no-load mutual

Stock investing for kids can provide lots of life lessons about careful planning, looking for quality and, most of all, patience. No matter how you choose to let your children invest, remember the goal is to learn financial responsibility. That means you should give them as much independence as possible and let them make some mistakes. Perhaps the most valuable lessons they can learn are that investing has its risks and setbacks.

Ode to puberty

I have a letter here from Mrs. Belle Ehrlich, of San Jose, Calif., who feels I should get a new hairdo. To quote her directly: "I enjoy reading most of your columns... but your hairdo in your photo sure looks dated. I suggest you go to a good hair stylist to give you a new and better hairdo. I hope you don't mind my criticism."

OK, perhaps I am a bit sensitive about my hair. I have been sensitive about my hair since second grade, when the Kissing Girls first swung into action. They roamed the playground, chasing after selected boys and trying to kiss them. We boys carried on as though we would have preferred to undergo the Red-Ants-Eat-Your-Eyelids-Off Torture than get kissed, but of course we wanted desperately to be selected. And I almost never was. The boys wanted desperately to be selected.
And I almost never was. The boys who were selected had wavy hair.
I had straight hair, and it did not help that my father cut it.

You should know that my father was a fine, decent and sensitive man, but unfortunately he had no more fashion awareness than a baked potato. He would have worn baked potato. He would have worn the same tie to work for 42 consecutive years if my mother had let him. So the way he would cut my hair is, he'd put me on a stool, and he'd start cutting hair off one side of my head with the electric clippers, then he'd walk around me and attempt, relying on memory, to make the other side of my head look similar. Which of course he could never quite do, so he would head on back around to take a stab at Side One again, and he'd keep this up for some time, and all I can say is, thank heavens they had a little plastic guard on the electric clippers so that you couldn't make the hair any shorter than a quarter-inch, because couldn't make the hair any shorter than a quarter—inch, because otherwise my father, with the best of intentions, trying to even me up, would have started shaving off slices of actual tissue until eventually I would have been able to turn my head sideways and stick it through a mail slot. As it was, in photographs taken back then, I look like an extremely young Marine, or some kind of radiation victim.

It also did not help that in third grade I became the first kid in the It also did not help that in third grade I became the first kid in the class to get glasses, and we are talking serious 1950s horn rims of the style that when you put them on a third-grade child, especially one with a comical haircut, you get a Mister Peepers effect such that everybody assumes the child must be a Goody-Two-Shoes Teacher's Pet science-fair-oriented little dweeb. And it also did not help that I was a Late Bloomer, pubertywise. I was ready for puberty sie. I was ready for puberty sie. I was ready for puberty all of us boys were. We wanted to catch up to the girls, who about two years earlier had very suddenly, in fact I think it was all on the same day, shown up at school a foot taller than us and with bosoms. So I was definitely looking forward to puberty as the Dawn of a New Era in the looks department, and you can just department, and you can just imagine how betrayed I felt when it started happening to the other boys well before it happened to me. They got ahead of me then, and sometimes I think I never and sometimes think I never really caught up. I am 38 years old now, and I have yet to develop hair on my arms. I see men much younger than myself, with hairy arms, and I think: Does this mean I'm not done with puberty yet?

I'm not done with puberty yet?

I realize I sound insecure here, but if you really wanted to see insecure, you should have seen me in eighth grade. I was a mess. That was why I developed a sense of humor. I needed something to do at parties. The other boys, the boys who had wavy hair and reasonable hormone-activity reasonable hormone-activity levels, would be necking with levels, would be necking with girls, and I would be over by the record player, a short radiation victim in horn-rimmed spectacles, playing 45s and making jokes to entertain the 10-year-old brother of whomever was holding the party. Now that I'm grown up, I keep reading magazine articles about these surveys where they ask you women what you really want most in a man, and you always say: A Sense of Humor. And I think to myself: Right. Sure. Great. Now you want a sense of Great. Now you want a sense of humor. But back in the eighth grade, back when it really mat-tered, what you wanted was

So anyway, Mrs. Belle Ehrlich of San Jose: Thanks, thanks a million for taking the time to drop me a note informing me that my hair looks awful. Because now that I'm looks awful. Because now that I'm grown up (except in terms of arm hair) and have contact lenses, and have finally come to think of myself as very nearly average in appearance, I can handle this kind of helpful criticism, and I will definitely see if I can't find a good hair stylist. This is assuming that

Think carefully when acquiring a pet

DEAR READERS:
Recently, we've been hearing so much about abandoned and unwanted pets that I thought I'd write about it.

I'm an avid animal lover and it distresses me when I realize how many of these poor little creatures end up dead in the streets or are put to "sleep" in pounds, through no fault of their own.

Such unhappy endings wouldn't occur if people thought carefully before acquiring a pet. Often they don't consider that all baby animals grow up, some to be very large. While it's difficult to resist out to the street of the st à cute kitten or cuddly puppy, à large cat or enormous dog could be

If you are thinking of giving an animal as a gift to someone, don't let it come as a surprise. Make sure that person wants a pet or your gift may end up unwanted and abandoned.

Parents shouldn't ignore teen-age drinking

Dear Ann Landers: I am writ-Dear Ann Landers: I am writing in reference to your recent article entitled, "Dead at 17"—
A Harrowing Warning to Teens Starting to Drive." I cried while reading it. My beloved 17-yearold son was one of four young people killed in a drunken driving accident in September.

Obviously the effect on me and my other three sons was devastating. But, more import-ant was the long-term effect on other young people in our com-munity in terms of altering their munity in terms of altering their behavior. I'm sorry to say, it made absolutely no impact. The parties go on as before. Getting plastered is still "in." Until there is peer pressure against drinking and driving we will continue to have serious in-juries and many more young people will die in alcohol-re-lated accidents.

Landers It is therefore incumbent on parents to take control of the situation and do something. I speak to parent and student speak to parent and student groups every opportunity I get. As the mother of a dead son and a nurse who has worked in emergency rooms for 20 years, I have plenty to say.

Many teen-agers are not able to make appropriate decisions regarding alcohol so we must make the decisions for them. By not taking a stand, by doing nothing, we condone their drinking. False identification cards are easily obtainable. It is estimated that three-fourths of all high school students have them.

high school students have them. I need your help, Ann. My ideas are not unique, but they need to be re-emphasized. Here they are:

1. Set a curfew and enforce it.
2. Seriously consider not allowing 16-year-olds to drive if they are not mature enough to accept adult responsibility.
3. Take the car keys away

Take the car keys away from your child indefinitely if he has been caught drinking.

5. Do not serve minors al-coholic beverages (pre-prom cocktail parties, etc.). It is against the law. When your child is going to a party call up and make sure there will be adult supervision and no alcohol will be served.

6. Know how much beer, wine and hard liquor is in the house and periodically check to see if any is missing. A locked bar is a good deterrent.

7. Check your child when he (or she) comes home for alcohol breath. Inform your teen that you will be waiting up to make sure "all is well."

8. If you leave your teenager home without adult supervision for an evening or a weekend, make it plain that there will be no parties while you are gone. If you learn he cannot be trusted, get an adult to stay in the house in your absence.

9. Be alert for false identifi-

Have a summer of fun with a clean barbecue grill

By BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS

Do you get burned up over cleaning your grill.

To avoid flare-ups — of your temper, that is — Better Homes and Gardens offers these tips to make a necessary chore easier, faster, and less messy.

Get a head start:

— Line the inside of the firebox with heavy foil. Why heavy foil? Because when you've finished the grilling and the ashes have cooled. you can bundle up the foil and throw it away — ashes and all. The heavy foil is stronger and less likely to tear and make a mess.

— An ounce of prevention is worth a lot of scrubbing. Spray the cold grill rack with a nonstick vegetable spray coating before cooking.

Tricks for the cleanup crew:

Remove the rack from over — Remove the rack from over the coals as soon as you're done cooking. Cover both sides of the rack with wet paper towels or newspapers and let stand while you eat. Later, the burned-on food will usually wash right off. Or, fill a large tub with hot, sudsy water and put the rack in the water to soak while you eat.

— To remove stubborn burned-on food from your grill, sprinkle dry baking soda on a damp sponge and lightly scour the grill rack. Or, scrub the grill rack with an abrasive-type cleaning pad, crumpled foil or a stiff grill brush. Read the cleaning and care directions that are supplied with your barbecue equipment before you use any cleaning products or abrasives to clean your grill rack.

Gas grill gimmicks:

— Clean the inside of your gas grill by turning the gas burners to the high setting. Close the hood and let the grill self-clean about 15 minutes. Let the grill cool, then wipe off the burned food particles.

Once a year, remove the grill rack, briquettes and briquette rack from your gas grill, and brush out the bottom of the grill.

Procter & Gamble responds to the Crisco can critics

In a recent column, I published letters from reader who experienced problems with the new Crisco shortening containers. For more than 75 years, Crisco, one of Procter & Gamble's most popular brands, was packed in tin containers, but recently a change was made to a less expensive foil—and—fiber container.

I called Procter & Gamble and asked spokesman Don Tessone whether Procter & Gamble had received complaints about the Crisco packaging.
"Yes, there have been some complaints," said Tessone. "Whenever a change is made, we know there will be some consumers who won't like it. In the case of the new Crisco containers, the complaints have been miniscule. We added them up and found only two complaints for every 10,000 containers sold." I asked Tessone about the nature of the complaints.

"Most of the complaints were about problems consumers experienced in opening the containers. We believe their can openers may have been in poor repair. A few of the complaints concerned the cans being greapy or slippery. We only received one complaint that concerned a mouse eating its way into Tessone says Procter & Gamble would like to hear from readers who have experienced problems with the new Crisco container. The toll-free number to call concerning any of Procter & Gamble's food products or beverages is 1–800–543–7276.

You've tried beefburgers, porkburgers, lambburgers and vealburgers. Now try tur-

Well, you could do that, but you'll be disappointed if you really expect that ground turkey is going to taste like beef. Or even cook or look like it.

Just as roast turkey doesn't taste like roast beef, ground tur-key won't taste like conventional hamburger. Turkey has its own unique taste and texture, a subtle flavor that mingles exceptionally well with a variety of seasonings ranging from mild to fiery. People prefer poultry to be cooked through, but not overcooked. Because of turkey's extremely low fat content, it's important not to dry it out.

Don't mix produce and sun

By DRS. LESTER COLEMAN and STEVEN DAVIS

Q. My sister has developed a dark rash on her hand, and her dermatologist told her it was due to contact with limes and sunlight. Have you ever heard of this?

A. What the dermatologist is referring to is indeed a wellknown entity called "phytophotodermatitis," and it does put things like celery and limes together with sun exposure in a rather curious but rational light.

rational light.

First you must understand that numerous vegetables and flowers contain chemicals which can sensitize the human skin to sunlight. Such plants include celery, dill, oil from 1 i m e peels, and chrysanthemums.

chrysanthemums.
To develop this type of rash one first needs an ample amount of these chemicals on the skin. Then it must be followed by enough of the right kind of ultraviolet radiation, the kind produced in some measure in suntanning salons and, of course, the sun.

and, of course, the sun.

An interesting case was reported last year by the Centers for Disease Control which related the grocery store to the suntanning salon. Public health afficials investigated a rash of tashes in an Ohio supermarket and found that those employees with by far the greatest chance of having such a rash had both handled fruits and vegetables and been going to suntanning salons.

When phytophotodermatitis occurs signs include redness of the skin, blistering and then a lingering pigment change. For this reason people who work with produce are well advised to wash their exposed hands and arms regularly and avoid excessive sunlight or tanning salons. — S.D.

This shortened muscle can This shortened muscle can interfere with the ease of movement. It is now possible, by relatively simple surgery, to safely repair this contracted muscle. There is no urgency about the surgery. The ideal time is chosen by the surgeon. Adults, too, develop torticollis, which is the technical term for a wry, or stiff, neck. In adults this is a temporary spasm of this long neck muscle. It may be caused by injury or exposure to drafts.

Motion sickness: the travelers' dilemma

Motion sickness, frequently experienced as dizziness accompanied by nausea, vomiting or pale, clammy skin, is the most common medical problem associated with travel. Accord ing to the American Academy of Otolaryngology — Head and Neck Surgery, an organization whose 7,800 physicians are specialists in treating disorders of the ear, nose, throat, face and neck, motion sickness is a disturbance of the balance mechanism of the middle ear.

"Many people know and dread the feeling of motion sickness," comments Dr. Cecil W.J. Hart, chairman of the Academy's committee on hear-ing and equilibrium. "We tend to group all related symptoms whether induced by travel on an airplane, car or boat under the heading of motion sickness, although people usually refer to these individual problems as air, car or sea sickness," he adds. Motion sickness occurs when the brain receives confusing messages from the systems of balance and movement. "The organ for balance and move-ment consists of three hollow, fluid-filled loops within the ear. These are the semi-circular canals. The sense organs send the brain messages about balance and movement stimulation that is occurring around the body," says Hart.

"However, overstimulation of these sense organs actually overwhelms the brain's ability to unscramble the messages. For example, a child riding a merry-go-round might get dizzy, or seiling in a choppy sea may cause sea sickness," he may cause sea sickness," he adds. Even animals are subject to motion sickness if the stimulus is prolonged and severe enough. "Continuous, undulat-ing and rolling motion are the most common causes," says Hart. In addition, susceptibility to motion sickness decreases with age and the length of exposure to the motion. However, any change in motion may produce new susceptibility.

For example, the sensation of an airplane turning as you circle the airport may cause air sickness. This is due to mismatched signals going into the brain. "Although your eyes just see the inside of the plane and you are not visualizing the turning movement, the sensation is present; these are the mixed signals that the brain perceives," says Hart.

Motion sickness also may occur while you are reading in a moving car. "The inner ears and skin receptors detect the motion around you, but your eyes concentrate on the pages of the book. Nausea, a head-ache or vomiting, described in this case as car sickness, may occur," says Hart. Motion sickness can be incapacitating for some travelers, but it is more frequently a minor annoyance and does not signal any serious medical problem. To minimize motion sickness, the academy advises taking the following steps:

• Ride where your eyes will see the same motion that your body and inner ears feel. For exam ple, sit in the front seat of the car and fix your eyes on a distant stationary object. If you are in a boat, look at the

 If you are subject to motion sickness, do not read while traveling and do not sit facing

 Avoid watching or talking to someone near you who is ex-periencing motion sickness. Avoid strong odors and spicy or greasy foods that may unsettle your stomach, especially just before or during travel.

In addition to these self-help remedies there are several medications available that minimize the effects of motion on the balance and movement systems. If you experience severe motion sickness or any other type of dizziness that seems to become progressively worse, the academy recom-mends a visit to a physician with specialized skills in the treatment of disorders in the ear, nose, throat, equilibrium and neurological systems.

Backaches and age go together

If you haven't become consicous of your back before 60, you soon will. Research shows that eight out of every 10 Americans will develop a back bad enough to interfere with daily activities.

Time and repetition make backaches more likely. You may have carried heavy sacks of have carried heavy sacks of groceries, moved awkward furniture, and sat at one desk for years without realizing the strain. And, then, suddenly the painful symptoms of a back problem hit —

In most cases, the underlying cause of back pain is not a serious organic disorder, but gravity. The muscles and tendons of the back and the abdomen have weakened and the abdomen have weakened and lost flexibility. The back is more vulnerable to spasms and injury. "Lack of regular exercise, sedentary work habits, and emotional stress can also contribute to low pack pain," says Dr. Jerry Dickey of the Kirksville College os Osteopathic Medicine, Mo.

measures. His recommendations

1. Lift objects properly. Bend. your knees and keep your back straight so that your legs do most of the work. Never bend forward from the waist to pick something

2. Sit up straight (as your parents tried to get you to do when you were a kid). Have a firm chair low enough so that, when your feet are on the floor, your knees are slightly highter than your hips. Rest your back comfortably against the back of the chair. When driving distances, stop every hour or so to stretch your legs.

3. Avoid high heels and heavy shoulder bags as much as possible. These throw a woman's weight forward, putting strain on the back. Alternate your purse from one shoulder to the other.
4. Sleep on a firm mattress.

Either a medium firm mattress or waterbed will provide good sup-port and relocation to the muscles of the back.

Experience leads me to want to add a couple of more precautions

5. Don't overreach. If you want to get a dish or vase that is shelved too high for your easy grasp, get up on a stool. Carefully. And don't reach around back of you for something you cannot easily get without turning.

6. Be conscious every day of fixing or removing stumbling or falling hazards in areas where you are moving about. Bruises to the back, particularly the tailbone and the hips, can be very slow to heal in older bodies.

If a person is plagued by back pain over a prolonged period, and the ailment has not responded to rest and home remedies, it is wise to consult your family physician.

Harvey Malick of the Bethel United Methodiat Church, Howell; The Rev. Otto Stoll of the Squankum Methodiat Church and the members of the Ocean Grove Camp Meeting Association all offered the use of their facilities to the brides inconvenienced by the ceiling collapse.

The cleanup of the 1800s Chapel was completed in early July and it was determined at that time that the Chapel had suffered structural damage. The building will not be available for weddings or open to the public while reconstructive repairs are made.

Selected dates through the end of October are still available for couples interested in getting married at the gazebo. For information about arranging a gazebo wedding, contact the Village Office weekdays at 938-2253.

Just who is this Max Headroom?

BY MOEL HOLSTON ndo Sentinel

Who is this Max Headroom,

where does he come from and why does he sometimes sp-sp-spspeak like th-th-th-this?
Good questions, although the second and third are easier to second and third are easier to answer than the first. Max, who has been called "the ultimate talking head" and "an elaborate techno-gag," comes from England, where he is already for comic effect.

Max himself, computer-generated for comic effect.
But who he is, or, more precisely, how he's generated, remains something of a mystery.
Max is all over the tube these days. Cinemax, the pay-cable service, is rerunning "The Max Headroom Story" this month in preparation for the premiere of new episodes of "The Max Headroom Show," a rock music-oriented talk program, in August.
Meanwhile, Max is appearing on other channels as "the world's leading Cokeologist" in a series of futuristic Coke commercials directed by Ridley Scott ("Alien," "Blade Runner").
Coca-Cola's press kit divulges that "Max is portrayed by Canadian actor Matt Frewer. After undergoing four hours of makeup, domning a latex mask and plastic cost and tim Mexic (Frewer's) donning a latex mask and plastic coat and tie, Max's (Frewer's) image goes through extensive editing, reanimation and computerized restructuring to produce the Max Headroom character." Another press release refers to Max as a "combination of anima-tion, graphic effects and a computerized audio track." A spokesman for the Atlanta-based Coca-Cola Company had little to add.

In the commercials and in the Cinemax talk show, Max Headroom comes across like a synthesis of every self-involved talk-show host who ever upstaged a guest.

I found "The Max Headroom Story," the hourlong sci-fi movie that established the character, more interesting than the talk show or its computerized star. In the movie, TV reporter Edison Carter (Matt Frewer) uncovers a scandal involving signed to thwart zapping. Carter discovers that excessive exposure to blipverts causes viewers to explode. But before he can expose the blipvert menace, Carter is marked for murder by his own network.

"blipverts," super-condensed

Fleeing the assassins on a motorcycle, Carter crashes into a sign posted on an underground garage that reads: "Max. Headroom 2.3 meters." When an evil computer genius employed by the network resurrects Carter as a computer-generated character, Carter has no memory beyond the Carter has no memory beyond the words on the sign,

My limited enthusiasm for Max the talk-show host and pitchman may be a matter of age: Coca-Cola's Fleming called Max "a youthful phenomenon."

Solomon educated in USSR

nybody who watched the women's gymnastics competition in the Goodwill Games must have realized that the Soviets are light years ahead of the rest of world in the sport. In fact, if special rules hadn't prevailed, every finalist in the individual competition would have been a young Soviet lady with an unpronouncable name.

One of those who watched the Soviets carefully was Alyssa Solomon, 15, of Wayside, Monmouth County's representative on the American National Team. Solomon, who earned her berth with a fourth place finish in the Championships of the United States, had to watch because she couldn't compete. She went to the Alyssa became the official "greeter" for U.S. gymnasts when they finished their routines, and as her mother Arlene Solomon said, "She got a 10 in greeting." However, as soon as the American team reached Parls, where it will begin an exhibition tour of Europe, the phone in Wayside began to ring.

"Alyssa said it was a thrill to see the top gymnasts in person," her mother reported.
"Her ankle is now 100 percent okay, and she will be able to do her full routines in France, Switzerland and Italy."

Then, in a more somber voice, Mrs. Solomon described what Alyssa had told her of the experience.

The American teams which went to Moscow for the games were split up on different airlines and routes because of the terrorist factor. The gymnasts flew Lufthansa, the German airline, and security throughout was extremely tight.

Alyssa carried a credit card and $450. She was also given a stipend in rubles in the USSR, but could spend those rubles only in Soviet stores and could not take any out of the country with her. A can of caviar she is bringing back cost the equivalent of $18.

If anything, the Goodwill Games again pointed out the differences between the American and Soviet systems of development. It costs the Solomons $12,000 to $15,000 a year for Alyssa's training. That includes things like private school, room and board, gym fees, body suits, transportation and spending money.

The Soviets pick from a much larger pool. According to Mrs. Solomon, there are as many as 15,000 gymnasts in the Soviet Union who are living away from home and

Buick: 4 tied at top

By HARRY ATKINS AP Sports Writer

GRAND BLANC, Mich. The charge of veteran Ben Crenshaw and the weight of leading through 36 holes proved to be too much for rookie Davis Love III in the third round of the $500,000 Buick Open. Buick Open. Crenshaw, Steve Pate and

Tom Purtzer all came from back in the pack yesterday to tie Love for the lead at 14-under 202 after 54 holes at Warwick Hills Colf & Country Club.

"If you don't shoot low scores out here, you're backing up," Love said. "I played pretty well. I just made mistakes on a couple of holes. I'm not real happy with it but I'm happy to still be in the lead."

Pate who, like Love, is looking for his first PGA Tour victory, fired a third-round 65. Pate had the most ground to

"This is the best position I've been in for a long while," Pate said. "I'm going to the practice range right away, and I'll putt for awhile, too."

Crenshaw, making his strongest showing since recovering from a hyperthyroid condition that caused him to

"Confidence is really the name of the game," Crenshaw said. "Fellows who are playing well this week probably have had good things happen to them the last few weeks to get them here.

Playing well in the U.S. Open helped my confidence. It was a place I have a feeling for. I'm seeing enough of the good shots to score well now."

Love, 22, a three-time All-American from the University of North Carolina who was tied for the lead after 18 holes and led alone at 12-under after two rounds, had three birdies on the front side to get to 15-

"I'm never surprised by a fellow who starts out on the PGA Tour," Crenshaw said of Love. "I played with Davis at the TPC and he shot a 67. He's a good player, a marvelous player."

TIES FOR LEAD — Ben Crenshaw moved into a tie with Davis Love III, Tom Purtzer and Steve Pate for the third-round lead of the Buick Open yesterday.

However, Love ran into trouble on the last nine holes at the rolling 7,014-yard course. Love had three bogeys and only two birdies on the back side.

included six birdies and a splendid save on the 413-yard, par-4 ninth hole, where he hit his second shot into the back bunker, then blasted out to within a foot of the pin.

All alone in fourth place after 54 holes was Gene Sauers, who shot 67 yesterday to move to 13-under 203.

Kenny Knox shot his third successive 68 to nail down fifth place at 12-under 204.

WOODBRIDGE, Ontario (AP) — Chris Johnson shot a 2-over-par 74 yesterday, but managed to take a one-stroke lead at 7-under-par 209, after three rounds of the $353,000 LPGA du Maurier Classic.

Going into the final round today of the 72-hole event, the fourth and final of the Grand Slam tournaments on the LPGA's tour — defending champion Pat Bradley was tied with Betsy King for second place at at 6-under, 210.

However, while the momentum of the tournament has swung her way, Bradley said it's something she'll have to maintain "if I'm going to make

NOORDWIJK, Netherlands (AP) - Severiano NOORDWIJK, Netherlands (AP) – Severiano Ballesteros, the Spanish superstar who began his international golf career exactly a decade ago at the Dutch Open Golf Championships, held a four-stroke lead after three rounds of this year's event with a 1-under-par 71 yesterday for a 5-under 203.

On another rain-soaked and windy day, the 29-year-old Spaniard fought a close battle with unheralded American Mike Allen, who started the day two strokes behind. The 27-year-old Allen, of San Francisco, finished in a tie for fifth at par 208 after a five-bogev, 2-

Gordon Brand at 207, 1-under.
Allen was tied with Vicente Fernandez of Argentina and Phillip Parkin of Wales.

Friday's second round was played over an unprecedented par-64 16 holes because the putting greens of the third and 11th holes had been severely damaged by self-professed anti-apartheid activists protesting the presence of five players they claimed to be South Africans. The holes were provisionally repaired, allowing an 18-hole third round, while all putting greens on the 6,941-yard seaside course were guarded by 45 volunteers camping

Before the turn yesterday, Ballesteros bogeyed twice, on the par-4 first and par-3 third, while both he and Allen birdied on the par-5, 615-yard second hole.

But after this shaky start, the Spaniard surged ahead with consecutive birdies on the par-3 sixth and the par-4 seventh, with the American bogeying twice before the turn, at the eighth and ninth holes. Allen lost another stroke at the par-4, 452yard 10th, where Ballesteros played par for the hole. From there on, the Spaniard and the American went along evenly until the par-3 17th, where Ballesteros lost a stroke. "Seve is a very good player, a tough one. But I had a great day," Allen told The Associated Press after his round.

It was the third victory in six starts this year for Cullin Hanover, who had earnings of $49,667 entering the race.

Elliott to add even more heat at Talladega

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — As if it wasn't hot enough, Bill Elliott has put the heat on the rest of the field in today's Talladega 500 NASCAR stock car race.

Air temperatures are expected to reach close to 100 degrees during the 500-mile race, with the thermometer climbing at least 40 degrees above that in the cockpits of the race cars. of the race cars.

Sun-baked Alabama, locked in a drought, also is likely to provide a heavy blanket of humidity by the time the 40 starters take the green flag at 12:15 p.m. CDT. But it will be Elliott, the record-setting Georgian, who will be on the minds of the top competitors heading into this race, rather than the heat and humidity.

"There's no question that Bill is the man to beat here," said Tim Richmond, who will start in the second row here after winning three of his last four starts. "If he's going good on a track like this, he's awful hard to top."

Elliott, who holds the qualify-ing record for the 2.66-mile Ala-bama International Motor Speed-way tri-oval at 212.229 mph, also way tri-oval at 212.22 mph, also broke his own race qualifying record in winning the pole with a fast lap averaging 209.005. TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — Cale Yarborough stayed in front of a wild scramble and held off Harry Gant to win the third round of the Budweiser International Race of Champions yesterday at Alabama International Motor Speedway. The crowds have been solidly behind Navratilova since her return, getting bigger and noisier with each match. After the doubles victory, Navratilova received a bouquet of red and yellow roses, which she threw to the cheering crowd.

Jaite, Gomez to meet in U.S. Pro finals

By HOWARD ULMAN

BROOKLINE, Mass. - Third-seeded Martin Jaite, last year's runner-up, won easily, and top-seeded Andres Gomez, seeking his third victory of the year, struggled, but both advanced to today's title match with victories yesterday at the U.S. Pro Tennis Championships.

Jaite needed just one hour and 14 minutes to knock off his Argentine Davis Cup teammate, 10th-seeded Horacio de la Pena, 6-2, 6-1, in last night's semifinal. Gomez, of Ecuador, survived a slow start before overcoming the heat and sixth-seeded Kent Carlsson of Sweden, 4-6, 6-4, 6-2, in an afternoon match.

Jaite, 21, ranked 17th in the world, used powerful shots from the baseline and speedy rushes to the net to earn his second crack at the U.S. Pro title in two years. In last year's final, he lost to Mats Wilander of Sweden.

This time, Jaite enters the championship match without having lost a set in his four matches here. De la Pena, who reached the semifinals with upsets over seventh-seeded Diego Perez and second-seeded Thierry Tulasne, suffered four consecutive service breaks after holding his serve in the second game.

"This was my best match in the tour-

"I have more experience, more confidence" than he had in last year's final, Jaite said. "I'm playing better than last year. I think I can win, but Andres is a very good player."

De la Pena, ranked 47th in the world, was dominated by his countryman.

"I was tired from yesterday's match," de la Pena said. "He was faster than me and I couldn't attack him."

Jaite won the first set with his third straight service break when de la Pena netted a forehand from the baseline. Jaite stayed in command by winning the first three games of the second set before de la Pena finally held his serve after saving one break point.

With the score 30-30 in the final game, de la Pena hit two bad forehands. One went wide and the other, from the baseline, went into the net to give Jaite the victory

Carlsson, ranked 23rd in the world, hadn't lost a set in his three previous matches in the Longwood Cricket Club tournament but was 0-3 in his career against Gomez.

"I felt my stamina could have been better," Underwood con-tinued. "I'd run a 30-yarder, then come back and break another one, but didn't have the break-away speed because I was a little winded from the last one. That's what I've been working on. All in all, I would have to stress the linemen though. They did the job and I just followed their blocks and tried to make things happen."

One of the things that made Underwood's transition to the college game easier was the com-panionship of two high school teammates.

"Mike Jones was a center and he started," Underwood. "It was like we were back in high school. We talked and all about the negative and positive things with training camp. I felt at home because Jones and Bruno (Ciaglia) were there. Maybe if they weren't things would have been different. The relationship me and coach (Walt) Hameline had ... the player-coach relationship ... me and coach were pretty close, we got along pretty well. I got along with everybody pretty well."

But the step-up in ranks wasn't as easy as Underwood's stats would lead you to believe.

"I felt pressured every game," Underwood said. "I knew I could do it and I guess I delivered to my potential. The team helped a lot because we were one, like a family. I have high self-esteem. If I want something, I go for it and give it all I got. There is a lot of pressure on me though. Every Saturday people are saying,

But in high school I was probably one of the least likely to succeed. Everyone thought I was succeed. Everyone thought I was always joking around and not going to class. Copeland wins 1st Olympic Festival gold HOUSTON (AP) — The name of the event has changed, but that made no difference to Jim Copeland. He did exactly the same thing in the 1985 National Sports Festival and the '86 U.S. Olympic Festival — win the first gold medal.

"I won the first gold medal of the Festival in Baton Rouge last year," Copeland said, "so it's significant for me that I did it again this year."

Copeland actually achieved some vengeance with the victory. He wilted in the stretch of the 120-kilometer last year after winning the team time trial. the 34 sports

Gregg Oravetz of Huntington Beach, Calif., took the silver medal and Matt Willis of Princeton, N.J., won the bronze.

"He outsmarted me," Oravetz said of Copeland. "Once he got the jump during the sprint, it was too hard to eatch up."

Two of the Festival's perennial softball stars, pitchers Kathy Arendsen and Ty Stofflet, were winners. Arendsen threw a one-hitter and struck out nine in leading the national champion Hi-Ho Brakettes representing the East, past the West's Southern California Renegades 4-0.

Arendsen, 14-0 this season, allowed only a third-inning double to Kim Kirk, who was thrown out trying to stretch the hit into a triple.

Soviet gymnastics experts begin the process by going into the schools to look for potential. They scientifically study the prospect's ability, body build and the physi-ques of parents. Even blue eyes can be a deterrent to the talent

The best of those youngsters are encouraged to go to the local gyms for instruction. There, they are weeded out again, and the top prospects are sent to sports in-stitutes where they receive topnotch coaching.

And coaching is another big difference. In the Soviet Union, the top gymnasts stay in the sport when they are done competing. In the USA, top gymnasts become actors or commentators. Mary Connor and Mitch Gaylord are just a few examples of how our gymnasts make commerical hay out of their successes rather than remaining in the sport.

The Soviets have regularly appointed national coaches. We appoint national coaches for each competition. Sometimes, those coaches have a tendency to favor their own students.

For instance, when it became obvious that Alyssa would not be able to compete at full strength in Moscow, Don Peters, the coach, named Marie Roethlisberger of his own gym, SCATS, to take Alyssa's place. Roethlisberger, who is 20, was the second alternate on the team. Peters bypassed Yolanda Mavity, seventh in the nationals and the first alternate. Roethlisberger did not do well in Moscow.

"The Soviets give glory, prestige and even financial re-wards to their gymnasts," Mrs. Solomon pointed out. "They go to school around their gymna not the other way around."

Political differences do not exist only between East and West. They also exist in our own United States Gymnastics Federation, which seems to have trouble getting its act together.

That's why the Soviets are a solar system removed from us in gymnastics ability. Don't blame our kids. Blame the system.

Fort Monmouth soldiers help chase the Air Force in tourney

By MARGARET ROBERTSON

FORT MONMOUTH — To Army soccer players here, June may have brought the soccer season to a grand finale as the 1986 World Cup games ended in Mexico City, but for some of them it was only the beginning of what may be their most exciting

These were the 18 soldiers chosen June 26 for the All-Army soccer team who left here for Luke Air Force Base, Ariz., to play in the annual Interservice Championship Tournament against the teams of the Navy, Marines, and Air Force during July

A hard-fought contest is expected. At present Army is tied with the Air Force in the number of times it has won the trophy during the six years the tournament has been played. Army has won twice, and Navy and Marines once each. The last two victories, however, have gone to the Air

Here for the past month, 30 soldiers from posts throughout the world tried out for the team. Since their arrival on June 5 they and their coaches, Steve Tanner and Chuck Kenison, were the guests of the U.S. Military Academy Preparatory School, with Bob Muller, its athletic director, as host, assisted by Tom Kulina of the Morale Support Division of the Army Communications-Electronics Command.

Billeted in quarters just vacated by Prep School students until their academic year begins in August, the soccer players had the use not only of the exercise and practice equipment they brought with them but also those of the school, and the training and medical facilities here as well

Well.

Tanner, in his second year as coach after two years as player on the All-Army team, pointed out that during the six years the annual tournament has been played a number of the soldiers on the All-Army team have been natives of other countries where soccer is the national sport.

This year, more of those who tried out for the team were born in the United States; however, among the contenders were two from Africa, one from the Caribbean one.

from Asia, and three from Europe.

Kenison described some of the challenges of taking such a varied group of individuals who had never played together before and blending them never played together before and blending them into a cohesive team in less than a month.

"Their styles are different," he said. "In cases where players from the United States and Western Europe would be aggressive, relying on quick thinking and hustle to get into position for a play, those from Africa or the Caribbean will rely on their finesse. There are good reasons for their differences in style."

GETTING READY — George Nevratakis, center, tries to keep the ball away from Jeff leath as Mike Arsenault observes during a practice session at Fort Monmouth. Hand-picked members of the fort team will play in the Interservice Championships at Luke Air Force Base in Arizona.

One, for example, is the difference in the climates where they learned to play, he explained. The length of a soccer game remains the same, but playing for 90 minutes in the high temperatures of a hot climate is very different form playing here or in Western Europe.

The higher the temperature the harder it is for a person to keep up the strenuous pace, he went on, so those used to playing in warmer climates develop subtle techniques which do not require as much action.

"In fact, they all emulate national styles,"

A technique he and Tanner have used to develop common skills and teamwork is utilizing exercises and games to sharpen abilities and reactions needed on the soccer field. The coaches' repertory includes some from their own ex-perience, form books, and from other coaches' demonstrations. but many also are devised on the spot from their observations of the skills their

Since, during the six days of the tournament, each service team will play every other team twice, the players may find that just keeping up with the pace of a game every day is a tough requirement. Ordinarily, knocks and bruises received during one game have time to heal before the next, but during this concentrated period the the next; but during this concentrated period the little injuries will accumulate. Too, the players will become more and more tired as the tour-nament progresses.

The manager, Ric Collier of Tallahassee, Fla., stationed at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, credited the training facilities here with the treatment which enabled him to recover in a couple of days from a pulled hamstring he received.

of their time in practice, those on service teams are volunteers whose full-time duties are as different as those of an infantry reconnaissance team member from those of a college professor.

than that used by most sprint racers. The Veterans' Division includes racers from 30 to 45. Pignataro won a bronze his first year and now has the four straight wins.

Although he is staring at his 41st birthday, Pignataro doesn't think that his skills are diminishing. He may be one of those rare athletes who peaks later than the average person, and he credits his training for his continued success.

"I was definitely stronger this year than last year," he reported. "I'm still doing the same kind of training as previously, but it is more intense. I'm lifting weights now for the whole season, and in the squat I'm lifting 50 pounds more than before."

The whole racing season to Pignataro means from April through October. However, he trains for that season all year. Part of his training includes working behind a motorcycle at speeds up to 50 miles an hour. He participates in road racing more for the conditioning aspect than the competitive, and he added a new wrinkle this year by training on the Wall Stadium dirt track three nights a The champion works out two to three hours

The champion works out two to three hours a night seven days a week, and that is after a day's work. As he gets older, he feels that is the toughest part of the grind — combining the work day with the training day.

When he attended Christian Brothers Academy and Miami University, Pignataro was a track man, a sprinter who ran the 60, 100 and 220. Thus, he had a good start on the strong legs a blovele racer needs.

About 20 years ago, he started to ride a bike to stay in shape. He read about a bike race in Somerville and has been tooling about on two wheels ever since. He has represented the United States in international meets and took fourth in an open 1,200 meters in Trinidad two years ago. Pignataro also ran the trials for the Goodwill Games and finished in the top 10—not bad for a veteran running against America's and Australia's best.

He also thinks his age can be an advantage, because experience plays a role in all racing.

"I think I won at Indianapolis on a combination of experience, training, strength and strategy," he said. "I could have choked after losing that first race, but years of experience have put me in that situation before. I came back at Cavanaugh twice as hard while he was a little more tired."
Pignataro has already started to think aristrain for next year's championships.

"No file definitely primary in the said the said

"No. 5 is definitely primary in my mind," he smiled. "If I didn't think I could do it, I wouldn't keep trying. It's like a dream. When I won the fourth, it was more exciting than the first. I can hold my emotions in during the competition, but when I go over the line, I let it out like you can't believe."

One for the thumb doesn't sound dumb when talking about Pignataro.

Reported bass weigh-ins for major bait and tackle shops include: Long Branch, 1,050; Sea Bright, 400; Neptune, 355; and Seaside Park, 588. Others in Monmouth and Ocean counties totaled 2,300 for a sub-total of 4,693.

"This sub-total is doubled since the bait and tackle shop owners estimate that they see 50 percent of the legal stiped bass caught in their areas," Hichak said. "This is an important assumption but one that we have to make. These shop owners have an excellent feel for the percentages of recorded and unrecorded fish, they have been in business a long time and are the acknowledged centers of striped bass fishing activity. Doubling sub-total (1) yields sub-total (2) of 9,386 stiped bass.

"For Long Beach Island, a major striped bass fishing center there, esti-mates no more than 259 stripers landed for 1985. Adding these 250 stripers for Long Beach Island to sub-total - (2) yields sub-total (3) of 9,636."

"A telephone survey was conducted in Atlantic and Cape may counties to completely cover the state's ocean front. Based on the average landings of 2.5 striped bass per store in 1985 and the total number of bait and tackle shops listed for these areas, times two to account for unrecorded fish, yields an additional 290 stripers. Added to subtotal (3), a total catch estimate of 9,926 fish is derived."

Striped bass, or rockfish as they are usually called in Chesapeake Bay and other areas of the south extending into New Jersey, are structure fish, the large population in Monmouth County makes heavy use of the jetties and sea walls.

The gently sloping beaches of Cape May County attract no striped bass, and the only practical fishing is at the inlets and along bridges over the estuaries.

Only a relatively few striped bass are ever entered in the annual Cape May County season long fishing contest.

The world record striped bass, 78 pounds, 8 ounces, was caught in Atlantic County in 1982, but there are jetties in Atlantic City and it was from the Vermont Ave. structure that the fish was

Russell A. Cookinham, director of the Division of Fish, Game and Wildlife, said he believed Congress will pass the Studds Bill before the end of July. This would give the federal government the power to regulate stiped bass fishing along the coast, and the power to impose a moratorium on a state that refuses to comply.

Bruce L. Freeman, Marine Fisheries Administrator, said that if the Studds Bill does pass he will move for a 33-inch minimum size on striped bass, as has been urged by fish and wildlife service.

Lt. Edward Markowski of the law enforcement unit sait 17 summonses have been issued to fishermen possession of stiped bass less than the legal limit of 24 inches, and seven for possession of more than five fish.

He said that the majority of the stripers being caught this year are 18 to 20-inch fish, and added that he believed these are the 1982 age class fish which feds want to protect to spawning size. He said that a lot of stripers are being caught off Jersey City, mostly under our present 24-inch limit.
